P R E F A C E

THE Dictionary includes, so far as is possible, the complete vocabulary of all English dialect words which are still in use or are known to have been in use at any time during the last two hundred years in England, Ireland, Scotland, and Wales. All words occurring both in the literary language and in the dialects, but with some local peculiarity of meaning in the latter, are also included. On the other hand, words which merely differ from the literary language in pronunciation, but not in meaning, are generally excluded, as belonging properly to the province of grammar and not to that of lexicography. It also contains (1) the exact geographical area over which each dialect word extends, together with quotations and references to the sources from which the word has been obtained; (2) the exact pronunciation in each case according to a simple phonetic scheme, specially formulated for the purpose; (3) the etymology so far as it relates to the immediate source of each word. The work can never become antiquated, and, when completed, will be the largest and most comprehensive Dialect Dictionary ever published in any country. It will be a 'storehouse' of information for the general reader, and an invaluable work to the present and all future generations of students of our mother-tongue. It also includes American and Colonial dialect words which are still in use in Great Britain and Ireland, or which are to be found in early-printed dialect books and glossaries. After some experience it became clear that this plan was absolutely necessary in order to avoid admitting into the Dictionary words for which I had not full and reliable evidence. It is difficult enough to obtain information about the pronunciation and exact usage of many words in the United Kingdom, and it would have been still more difficult to obtain such information from abroad. Some idea of the labour involved in this respect may be gathered from the fact that at least 12,000 queries have been sent out from the 'Workshop' connected with words contained in this volume. And yet, in spite of all this labour, it has been necessary to keep back quite a number of words—see list on pp. xxi-xxiv—for which there is at present insufficient evidence to allow them to be included in the Dictionary. It is intended to issue a list of such words with each Part, and all the friends of this undertaking are kindly invited to send to the Editor more information about these words, so that they can eventually be included in a Supplement. The article on the verb 'To be' cost very considerable time and trouble. Copies of a printed form containing 194 points were sent to 150 persons in various parts of the United Kingdom; and 150 similar forms containing many queries were sent out about the words By, By(e). Many of the replies to these two sets of queries showed how very difficult it is becoming to obtain information about minute points connected with grammar. It is quite evident from the letters daily received at the 'Workshop' that pure dialect speech is rapidly disappearing from our midst, and that in a few years it will be almost impossible to get accurate information about difficult points. Even now it is sometimes found extremely difficult to ascertain the exact pronunciation and the various shades of meanings, especially of words which occur both in the literary language and in the dialects. And in this case it is not always easy to decide what is dialect and what is literary English: there is no sharp line of demarcation; the one overlaps the other. In words of this kind I have carefully considered each case separately, and if I have erred at all, it has been on the side of inclusion.

It has taken hundreds of people, in all parts of the United Kingdom, twenty-three years to collect the material for the Dictionary. For the lists of Workers and Correspondents see pp. ix-xiv. In almost every county, competent people have been secured to assist in answering queries and in supplying any words that may have been omitted from the glossaries in their respective districts. Such a plan ensures a far higher degree of accuracy and completeness than can possibly be attained by any other method. In addition to the great amount of material sent in from unprinted sources—see pp. xi, xii—upwards of three thousand dialect glossaries and works containing dialect words have been read and excerpted for the purposes of the Dictionary¹. Through the great kindness of the Princess, the whole of the MS. collections and the library of the late Prince Louis Lucien Bonaparte were placed at my disposal for over two years, which enabled me to get many thousand words and quotations from hundreds of small local books not to be found in any of our public libraries.

I had hoped to give a classification of the Dialects in this Preface, but I now think that it will be better to wait until I have finished a greater portion of the Dictionary. From the words contained in this volume, it would be easy to give a sketch-map showing clearly those districts in which the Norse element is particularly strong. It is also most remarkable how in certain districts many French words have been preserved, which are now obsolete in the literary language. At present I have not the necessary leisure to work out and account for the fact that in Ireland the dialects of some districts are essentially Scotch whilst in other districts they agree with those of the West of England. Also it cannot be a mere accident that the dialect of South Pembrokeshire contains quite a number of words of Flemish origin. Later on I hope to work out these matters fully, and also to account for the special peculiarities of the Kentish dialects. It will also be easy to show that a great many words which are now confined to particular districts, were confined to those districts already in the Middle Ages, e. g. early illustrations of many words still in use in East Anglia are only to be found in the Promptorium; the same applies to many modern Yorkshire words and the York Mystery Plays. In fact, when the Dictionary is completed it will be of immense value in helping to settle the dialect in which many of our Middle-English manuscripts were written, and it will throw a flood of light upon many problems connected with Old and Middle-English phonology.

Any one who takes the pains to examine the Dictionary will find that neither time nor trouble has been spared in order to obtain accurate information about popular games, customs, and superstitions; and, as far as possible, to give the literature where further information will be found. In the etymological part of the dictionary, it must not be assumed that where no etymology is given there has been no attempt made to find one. The very opposite is the case. It has often happened that dozens of dictionaries, special glossaries, and articles in philological journals have been carefully searched without any satisfactory results. In all such instances I have preferred to give nothing rather than a mere guess. In thousands of instances it will be noticed that there is no previously printed authority for the use of words in some districts. In all such cases I give the initials of the persons who supplied the information; and I may add that one of my senior assistants has spent over a fortnight in verifying these initials; so that they may be accepted as being correct. Several words found in printed glossaries are omitted from the Dictionary as being 'Ghost Words.' All such words will be collected together and printed in the last volume.

The number of queries sent out was proportionately greater in the C-words than in A and B, owing to the great importance of obtaining accurate information about their pronunciation; as it is of special value to students of English philology to know in which districts the initial guttural has remained and in which districts it has become the affricata ch. When the letters C and K are finished, it will become evident that several factors have to be taken into consideration in formulating the laws for the normal development of Germanic initial k. This volume contains a large number of words which will be specially interesting to folk-lorists and English philologists, as well as to the students of dialects in general; e. g. Acre, Adder, Agate, All, As, At, *Bandy sb.*¹, Banian-day, Banshee,

Owing to the large number of A-words containing Latin and Greek prefixes, the difference between the number of words beginning with A and B is not great in a dictionary of literary English;—e. g. in Webster, A occupies 99 pages and B 81 pages. A occupies 106 pages in the English Dialect Dictionary, but B occupies no less than 370 pages. The statistics given below will show what an immense wealth of words there is in our dialects, and from them some idea can also be formed of the enormous amount of labour involved in the production of this volume. It ought to be mentioned that the figures do not include the quotations, &c., from early writers, which are placed within square brackets at the end of each article. Nor is any account taken of the many thousands of cross-references. This volume contains 17,519 simple and compound words, and 2,248 phrases, illustrated by 42,915 quotations with the exact source from which they have been obtained. There are, in addition, 39,581 references to glossaries, to manuscript collections of dialect words, and to other sources; making a total of 82,496 references. These figures are made up as follows:—

	A	B	C	Total
Simple and Compound Words	1,508	7,789	8,222	17,519
Phrases	379	910	959	2,248
Quotations	6,759	18,198	17,958	42,915
References without quotations	2,500	17,542	19,539	39,581
Total references	9,259	35,740	37,497	82,496

As stated on the title-page, the Dictionary is in a great measure founded upon the publications of the English Dialect Society. It was with this express object in view that the Society was started at Cambridge in 1873, with the Rev. Prof. Skeat as Secretary and the Rev. J. W. Cartmell as Treasurer. In 1876 the Headquarters of the Society were removed to Manchester; when J. H. Nodal, Esq., became the Secretary and G. Milner, Esq., the Treasurer. The Headquarters remained at Manchester until 1893. During these eighteen years Mr. Nodal rendered most valuable services to the Society, and it is not too much to say that it was mainly through his great interest in the subject that the Society published so many excellent County and other glossaries. From 1893 to 1896 the Headquarters were in Oxford, during which time I acted as Secretary and the Rev. A. L. Mayhew as Treasurer. After the Dictionary had been begun, it was no longer necessary to continue the existence of the Society, and it was accordingly brought to an end in 1896 after it had published 80 volumes, all of which are being incorporated in the Dictionary.

In the year 1886 Professor Skeat raised a fund, to which he contributed nearly half the money himself, for the purpose of helping to defray the expenses of collecting and arranging the material for the Dictionary. He had the good fortune to obtain the services of the Rev. A. Smythe Palmer, D.D., who acted as organizing Editor for two years and a half. During this period Dr. Smythe Palmer succeeded in getting together and in arranging in rough alphabetical order a large amount of material. And I take this opportunity of expressing to him my sincere gratitude for all the valuable help he rendered at this initial stage of the work. In 1889 it was thought the material was sufficiently complete to enable me to begin to edit the work for press. I accordingly prepared several articles and had them printed. These articles convinced me that at least twice the amount of the material which had then been collected would be required before attempting to edit the Dictionary. I issued a circular stating the kind of help wanted, and sent it to all the principal newspapers and public libraries in the United Kingdom, as well as to many thousand people who might be likely to help in the work. By this means the number of voluntary helpers was increased to over 600. It then became advisable to form local Committees in various parts of the country with the object of getting all the books relating to the respective districts read and the slips arranged in alphabetical order before being sent to me. After preparing several lists of books which still remained to be read for the Dictionary, I addressed many meetings on the great value of dialects for philological and other purposes, and succeeded in forming a number of local Committees which have rendered most valuable assistance. In this connexion I wish to express my best thanks to all the Committees and their Secretaries, and more especially to J. K. Hudson, Esq., B.A., Manchester; S. K. Craven, Esq., Bradford; R. O. Heslop, Esq., Newcastle-upon-Tyne; T. C. Peter, Esq., Redruth; and W. H. Hills, Esq., Ambleside, who have spared neither time, trouble, nor expense in helping to make the material as complete as possible. I have also the pleasant task of expressing my sincere gratitude to all the voluntary readers, correspondents, and those people who so kindly placed their manuscript collections of dialect words at my disposal. From the lists given on pp. ix-xiv it will be seen that something like a thousand people have in one way or another rendered valuable assistance in the work. In the Preface it is not necessary to repeat all these names, but I must specially mention the following who have so largely contributed to make my material what it is:—Mrs. F. A. Allen, Ilminster; H. A. Barnes, Esq., Farnworth; Dr. G. F. Blandford, London, W.; the Rev. G. B. R. Bousfield, M.A., London, W.; Dr. T. N. Brushfield, Budleigh-Salterton; Miss E. F. Burton, Carlisle; Miss R. H. Busk, London, W.; R. Pearse Chope, Esq., B.A., Bayswater, W.; G. E. Dartnell, Esq., Salisbury; J. W. Darwood, Esq., Cambridge; Prof. C. A. Federer, Bradford; Dr. Fitzedward Hall, Marlesford; the Rev. E. H. Goddard, M.A., Wootton Bassett; Mrs. S. Hewett, Lynton; J. K. Hone, Esq., Dudley; E. C. Hulme, Esq., F.R.C.S., S. Kensington; the Rev. Hamilton Kingsford, M.A., Stoulton; Miss S. A. Kirby, London; B. Kirkby, Esq., Batley; Miss E. Lloyd, Crowborough; the Rev. Dr. Mitchell, S. Leith; the Rev. W. M. Morris, M.A., Treherbert; Mrs. Parker, Oxford; A. Pope, Esq., B.A., Manchester; Dr. E. W. Prevost, Newnham, Glos.; Miss Romanes, Oxford; the Rev. W. F. Rose, M.A., Weston-super-Mare; the Rev. J. S. F. Singleton, M.A., Weston-super-Mare; E. Smith, Esq., Birmingham; J. E. Sugars, Esq., M.A., Manchester; S. P. Unwin, Esq., Shipley; the Rev. Alex. Warrack, M.A., Stranraer; T. C. Warrington, Esq., B.A., Carnarvon; I. Wilkinson, Esq., Skelton, Yorks.; the Rev. G. Williams, M.A., Thornhill; Mrs. Joseph Wright, Oxford; and also the Editors of The Leeds Mercury Supplement, The Penrith Observer, Notes and Queries, and The Yorkshire Weekly Post.

I owe most sincere thanks to my senior Assistants, Miss Partridge, Miss Hart, and Miss Yates, as also to the other Assistants who have helped so faithfully and excellently in the preparation of this volume. My special thanks are also due to Mr. Horace Hart, Controller of the University Press, for much valuable advice in regard to the technic of the Dictionary; and also to Mr. Ostler, the press reader, for the most excellent manner in which he has read the press proofs. I also express my deep sense of indebtedness and obligation for the bequest of the late Thomas Hallam, Esq., Manchester, and for the grant from the Royal Bounty Fund made by the Right Hon. A. J. Balfour, M.P., the First Lord of the Treasury. Had it not been for this timely substantial support, the labours of hundreds of people, extending over nearly a quarter of a century, would have been spent in vain; for I had exhausted all my own money, amounting to considerably over £2,000. And lastly, to the Delegates of the University Press I owe my best thanks for their great kindness in providing me with a 'Workshop' at the Press at a nominal rent; but the Delegates, while offering me every facility for the production of the work, have no responsibility, pecuniary or other, in connexion with it. The whole responsibility of financing and editing the Dictionary rests upon myself. I am therefore all the more grateful to the Subscribers who have supported me in this great and difficult undertaking. They may rest assured that every effort will be made to maintain the present quality of the work, and to issue the Parts at regular intervals of six months until the Dictionary is completed.

JOSEPH WRIGHT.

PRONUNCIATION

AFTER making many experiments, it has been found advisable to devise a plain and simple phonetic alphabet to represent the approximate pronunciation. An elaborate transcription is useless to people who have not had a practical training in phonetics. And it can all the more easily be dispensed with in giving the pronunciation of the dialect words in the body of the Dictionary, because the phonological introduction which I hope to write when the Dictionary is finished, will contain the exact pronunciation of all the common words in everyday use. It is impossible to attempt this part of the work alongside of the Dictionary, as it will require some years of patient toil to collect reliable material and to digest it. In the meantime I must ask philologists to be contented with the brief résumé given at the beginning of each letter of the alphabet for the vowels, see e.g. pp. 1, 2. On comparing the results given there with those arrived at by Karl Luick in his excellent book Untersuchungen zur englischen Lautgeschichte, it will be found that we differ in a few minor points. After a careful perusal of his book, I now think it would have been better to have used the word usual instead of normal on p. 1 of the Dictionary.

I. CONSONANTS

The only consonants which require to be specially mentioned are :

dg like the j in just .	tf like the ch in cheap .
ʒ " " s " pleasure .	þ " " th " thin .
x " " ch " Germ. Nacht, ich .	ð " " th " then .
ʃ " " sh " ship .	ŋ " " n " think .

Note: (r) is only sounded when the next word in the same sentence begins with a vowel.

II. VOWELS

SIMPLE VOWELS.

a like the a in Germ. Mann .
æ " " a " Southern Engl. bat .
ɛ " " u " up .
e " " e " men .
i " " i " bit .
o " " o " mob .
u " " u " full .
ə " " e " Germ. Gabe .
ā " " a " father .
ē " " e " Germ. Reh .
ī " " ee " feet .
ō " " o " Germ. Bote .
ō " " aw " law .
ū " " oo " food .
ū " " i " bird .
œ " " ö " Germ. mögen .
ü " " ü " Germ. Güte .

DIPHTHONGS.

ai like the i in five .
au " " ou " mouse .
ei " " a " late .
eu " " ou " the s. dial. pronun. of mouse .
eə " " a " care .
iu " " ew " few .
iə " " ea " fear .
oi " " oy " boy .
ou " " ow " low (with the first element more open).
oə " " o " bone (dial. pronun. of w. Yks.).
oə " " a " all (n. dialects).
ui " " oo " food (n. dialects).

Note: (1) No attempt is made to distinguish between close and open e. (2) The first element of oə is a very close sound closely approaching u. (3) The stress is always on the first element of diphthongs, unless the contrary is indicated in the Dictionary. (4) Voallic m, n are written əm, ən. (5) A point after a vowel (no·bəd) indicates that the vowel bears the chief stress in the word.

THE ENGLISH DIALECT DICTIONARY

A. I. Apart from the influence of neighbouring sounds, the normal development of OE. æ in closed syllables is as follows:—

1. a in Sc., all the northern and midland counties to n.Hrf., Wor., n.Glo., n.Brks., Oxf., se.Hrt., s.Cmb., nw.Nrf., n.Suf.

2. The sound æ has remained in all the other counties except the parts of counties named under 1, and the parts of the country named under 3, 4.

3. It has become *a*¹, a sound closely approaching æ, in e.Suf., ne.Nrf. and parts of Hrf., Ess.

4. It has become e in Mid., se.Bck., s.Hrt., and sw.Ess.

II. The normal development of OE. æ and a in open syllables is:—

1. Long close ē in Bnff., Frf., Lothian and Fif., se.Arg., s.Bte., n.Ayr., e. and s.Dmb., Lnk., Rnf., m.Nhb. (Whittingham), s.Yks., Lan. (see 4, 5, 7), ne.Chs., Stf. (see 3, 4, 8), Der. (see 2), Not., Lei., ne. and sw.Nhp., e.War., s.Wor., n., me. and se.Shr., nw.Brks., nw.Hrt., s.Cmb., nw.Nrf., e.Suf. (Orford), w.Cor.

2. Long open ē in Nai., Mry., Abd., Kcd., Per., s.Ayr., w.Dmf., Kcb., Wgt., Dur. (Berwick-upon-Tweed, Lanchester), se.Yks., w.Yks. (Huddersfield, Halifax), nw.Der., Rut., m.Nhp., Hrf. (Ledbury), Brks. (Hampstead Norris), m.Cmb., ne. and s.Nrf., n. and w.Suf., e.Suf. (Framlingham), Hmp. (Andover), e.Dor., s.Som. (Montacute), n.Dev. (North Molton), s.Dev.

A, sb. Wil. Som. (?) Apparently obs. except in comp. A-harrow or -drag.

s.Wil. Ais or As, harrows or drags, DAVIS Agric. (1813), quoted Archaeol. Rev. (1888) I. 34. Wil.¹ This term for a harrow was still occasionally to be heard some thirty years ago, in both Somerset and Wilts, but is now disused.

Hence comp. A-drag.

Wil. For some years a very heavy triangular machine was used, called an A-drag, with its tines so fixed on its three sides, as that when drawn by one point, it made parallel furrows eight or nine inches apart, DAVIS Gen. View Agric. Wil. (1811) vii. 52-3. The late Mr. Jas. Rawlence, a great authority on agriculture, told me it [word A-drag] was still in use in s.Wilts, though no doubt it would be an improved form of the machine (G.E.D.); Wil.¹ A-Drag. Still used in s.Wilts for harrowing turnips before the hoers go in.

[This term is derived from the triangular shape of the drag, resembling the letter A.]

Rut.¹ Acquainted, in the first stage of courting. Hrf.² They've been acquainted a good while. Nrf. Acquented with, engaged to be married (E. M.).

ACRAZED, pp. n.Yks. [əkrez'd.]

n.Yks.² A-craz'd, wrong-headed.

[From OFr. acraser (mod. écraser), to break in pieces. The E. craze is probably an aphetic form of acraze.]

ACRE, sb. Various dial. uses in Great Britain and Irel. See below. [ē'kə(r), eə'kə(r), ya'kə(r).]

1. Any piece of land, arable or tilled, a field; chiefly confined to names of fields, whatever their extent may be.

w.Yks.¹ Acker, fine mould. Nhp.² Fields of much larger extent than an acre are called by this name, as Green's-yacker, Rush-yacre. Nrf. Acre, a field, as Castle Acre in Norfolk (K.).

2. A measure of land, differing in various parts of Great Britain and Ireland from the normal statutable piece of 40 poles long by 4 broad=4840 sq. yds. This variation sometimes coincides with the different nature of the crop, &c., which the land yields.

Sc. A Scotch acre commonly = 6084 square yards, ROBERTSON Agric. in Per. (1799) (N.E.D.); The Scotch acre was nearly one acre, one rood, two perches of Eng. measure, Libr. Agric. (1830). Ir. 121 Irish acres do make 196 English statute acres, PETTY Pol. Anat. (1691) 52. Wm. The acre [has] 6760 yards (C. D.). s.Lan. Chs.¹ The acre is 10,240 sq. yards, and is still in constant use amongst farmers, especially in the northern half of the county, and in s.Lan. Chs. land measure is as follows:—64 square yards = 1 rood (i. e. rod), 40 roods = 1 quarter, 4 quarters = 1 acre. Lin. Among the customary English acres are found . . . 200 [perches] for copyhold land (C. D.). Lei. The acre has 2308½ yards (C. D.). Wales. A Welsh acre is usually two English acres, WORLIDGE Syst. Agric. (1681); In Wales different measures, the erw, the stang, the paladr, are called acres (C. D.). Cor. [5760 yards] Libr. Agric. (1830). Var. dial. An acre sometimes is estimated by the proportion of seed used on it; and so varies according to the richness or sterility of the land, WORLIDGE Syst. Agric. (1681) 321. Among the customary English acres are found measures of the following numbers of perches—80 or 90 (of hops), 107, 110, 120 (shut acre), 130, 132, 134, 141, 180 (forest acre), 212, 256 (of wood) (C. D.).

3. A lineal measure.

Not. Acre is 28 yards running measure (W. W. S.); Not.¹ The word 'acre' is occasionally used by elderly men here instead of 'chain'—22 yards—for the measurement of hedging and ditching, but it is not in common use, nor is it known as a lineal measure by the majority of country people in this district. n.Lin.¹ Acre, a measure of length. An acre-length, 40 poles or a furlong. An acre-breadth, 4 poles or 22 yards. Midl. Acre, a species of long measure, consisting of 32 yards; four roods, MARSHALL Rur. Econ. (1790) II. Lei. Acre is 24 yds. running measure (W. W. S.); Lei.¹ In addition to its ordinary meaning, [acre] is used as a measure of length in two distinct senses. In one it is equal to 220 yards: in the other it is equal to four rods of 8 yards, or 32 yards. In measurements of hedging, ditching, and draining it is . . . used in the latter sense.

4. In his acres.

Cor.¹ In his acres, in his glory.

5. Comp. Acre-breadth, see 3; Acker-dale, applied to land apportioned in acre strips; Acre-length, see 3; -mould, finely tilled earth, see 1; -painting, easy painting of which a great quantity can be quickly done; -stones, field stones, see 1; -tax, see below.

Sc. Wad Phillis loo me, Phillis sould possess Sax acre-braid o' richest pasture grass. Picken Poems (1788) 104 (JAM.); Gillmer-toune . . . being all of it acker-dale land, Somcrvills Mem. (1815)

I. 168 (JAM.). N.Cy.¹ Acker-dale lands, common fields in which different proprietors hold portions of greater or less extent. Nhb.¹ Acre-dale or acre-deal lands, land apportioned in acre strips. n.Lin.¹ Acre-length. w.Yks.¹ A nice birk—at grew atop o' th' Ealand, on some acker mould; w.Yks. Ah'm dewin' a bit o' acre-paintin' (Æ.B.). nw.Dev.¹ Acre-stones, loose stones, such as are picked up in fields. n.Lin.¹ Acre-tax, a draining tax on the Ancholme Level [for maintaining sea-banks].

Hence Ackery, adj. abounding in finely tilled earth.

w.Yks.¹ Ackery, abounding with fine mould.

[OE. æcer, field + dæl, a portion, share.]

ACRE, v. Sc. To make payment at a fixed rate per acre the basis of any transaction, esp. to pay labourers at this rate to gather the harvest in. Of a labourer: to work under these conditions.

[A- (*pref.*¹⁰) + crooked.]

ACROSPIRE, *sb.*¹ w.Yks. Also written accaspire. A kind of stone.

w.Yks. Accaspire, a sort of hard stone containing particles of flint, Hlf. Wds.; Accaspire, Aerospire, Acklespire, Ochrespire, used in Halifax district, to denote hard nodules of unworkable stone, occasionally met with in the rock of the lower coal-measures from which the Yorkshire stone is quarried. Called Iron-stone round Bradford (W.H.V.).

[Etym. unknown.]

1. The sprouting of corn; esp. of barley in the process of malting.

Se. When [barley] shoots at the higher extremity of the grain . . . it is the acherspyre that forms the stalk (JAM.). N.Cy.¹ Der.¹ Corn shooting at both ends; Der.² n.Lin.¹ The sprout of corn before the ears come forth. Nhp.¹ We restrict the use of this word to the germ of barley in the process of malting—the chitting or sprouting at that end of the grain from which the stalk rises. e.An.¹ Acre-spire, or Acre-spit, the sprouting or 'chicking' of barley in malting. Nrf.¹ The sprouting of barley. Suf.¹ The sprouting or chicking of barley in the process of germinating into malt.

2. Of potatoes or turnips: premature sprouting.

n.Cy. Ackersprit, a potato with roots at both ends, GROSE (1790); N.Cy.¹ The premature sprouting of a potato. Lan.¹ A potato, turnip, or other root, with roots at both ends. Stf.¹ Akerspir [sic], the shoot of a potato. e.An.¹ Acre-spire, or Acre-spit, the sprouting or 'chicking' of . . . stored potatoes.

[1. Acherspyre, in making of Malt . . . Dicitur de hordeo, ubi in praeparatione burs seu Brasii nimum, & ab utraque extremitate, germinat, SKINNER (1671) L III 2. Cp. JOHNSON: Aerospire, a shoot or sprout from the end of seeds before they are put in the ground ('Many corns will smilt or have their pulp turned into a substance like thick cream, and . . . send forth their substance in an aerospire,' Mortimer Husbandary). Etym. doubtful. Prob. spire repr. OE. spīr, a spike, blade.

ACROSPIRE, v. Sc. n.Cy. Chs. Wor. Shr. Suf. Also written ackerspīer N.Cy.²; ackerspyre Chs.¹; ackerspire w.Wor.¹

1. Of barley in the process of malting: to send out the first leaf-shoot.

Se. Barley is said to acherspyre when it shoots at the higher extremity of the grain, from which the stalk springs up (see Come). In the operation of malting, . . . it shoots first at the lower end, a considerable time before it acherspyres (JAM.). N.Cy.¹ For want of turning, when the malt is spread on the floor, it comes and sprouts at both ends, which is called to acherspyre, MORTIMER Husbandry; N.Cy.² Used when the blade in malt grows out at the opposite end to the roots. Nhb.¹ Cum.¹ When the malting process is too long continued and both root and sprout are visible, the barley is yakkerspīred and injured for malting. Chs.^{1,2a}

2. Of potatoes: to sprout or put forth fresh tubers prematurely.

w.Wor.¹ Shr.¹ I doubt the tittoes'll ackerspire wuth this wet. Hence Ackerspīred, Ackerspīrit, pp. adj. having sprouts or acherspires.

Chs.¹ Potatoes are said to be ackerspīrit when the axillary buds on the stem grow into small green tubers, as is often the case in wet seasons; Chs.²; Chs.³ The potatoes were very generally ackerspīrit. a.Chs.¹ Shr.¹ Potatoes are ackerspīred, when after a dry season heavy rain sets in, and the super-abundant moisture causes them to put forth new tubers, instead of increasing them in size, thus spoiling the growth. Suf.¹ Acre-spirit.

ACROSS, prep. and adv. Yks. Lin. Brks. Dev. Also written acraas Brks.¹ [æk'rə.s.]

1. prep. Of time: about.

[A-, on + dawd, q.v.]

A-DAYS, adv. Obs. e.An. and var. dial. At present, nowadays.

e.An.¹ Flour sells cheap a-days. I seldom see Mr. Smith a-days; e.An.² I never heard this word used, as given by Forby, in either Norfolk or Suffolk. Var. dial. A-days, now, abbreviation of now-a-days, HOLLOWAY.

[In TOONE (1834) s.v. A, the word adays is cited among other words containing the pref. a-, in which it is still retained by the vulgar.]

ADBUT, see Headbut.

ADDER, sb. Sc. Nhb. Dur. Yks. Lan. Chs. Lin. Shr. Wil. Cor. Also written ather, edder, ether; see below. [a'də(r), also e'də(r), e'də(r).]

1. In dial., besides the usual meaning of adder, the use of the word is extended to any kind of snake.

Shr.² Edder, ether, of general application for any kind of snake.

Comp. Adder-bead, the stone supposed to be formed by adders (JAM.); -broth, broth made from the flesh of an adder; -pike, the fish Trachinus vipera (C.D.); -stone, a perforated stone (see below); -stung, bitten by an adder; -thing, a serpent.

Dmf. [Adders are said to] assemble to the amount of some hundreds in a certain time of summer, to cast off their sloughs and renew their age. They entwist and writhe themselves among each other until they throw off their last year's sloughs, half melted by their exertions. These are collected and plastered over with frothy saliva, and again wrought to and fro till they are condensed and shaped into an adder bead, Rem. Nithsdale Sug. 111 (JAM.). n.Lin.¹ Hetherd-broth, a broth made of the flesh of an adder boiled with a chicken. A specific for consumption. It was till about fifty years ago the custom for certain wanderers to come yearly during the hot weather of summer from the West Country (q.v.) to search on the sand-hills for hetherds which they said they sold to the doctors for the purpose of making hetherd-broth. Sc.

Adder-stane, the same as adder-bead (JAM.). The glass amulets or ornaments are, in the Lowlands of Scotland, called adder-stanes, TOLAND Hist. of Druids (ed. 1814) Lett. I. § 16 (JAM.). Nrf. [A family was] in possession of a so-called adder-stone and four Druidical beads, some of which, or all conjunctively, had been efficacious in curing various complaints, but more particularly those in cattle. . . [The adder-stone] is not unlike, in form and size, to the whorls which, in conjunction with the distaff, were, only a century or two ago, in general use in spinning yarns, N. & Q. (1872) 4th S. ix. 155. N.Cy.¹ Adder-stone, also called self-bored stone; a perforated stone—the perforation imagined by the vulgar to be made by the sting of an adder. Nhb. A charm'd sword he wears, Of adderstone the hilt, RICHARDSON Borderer's Table-bk. (1846) VII. 164; Nhb.¹ Adder-styen, a stone with a hole through it [hung behind doors and in fishing boats as a charm]. And vain Lord Souli's sword was seen, Though the hilt was adderstone, The Court of Keeldar.

n.Yks.² Addersteecans, the perforated fragments of grey alum shale, the round holes [of which] tradition assigns to the sting of the adder. As lucky stones they are hung to the street door-key, for prosperity to the house and its inmates, just as the horse-shoe is nailed at the entrance for the same purpose. Suspended in the stables, as are also the holed flints that are met with, they prevent the witches riding the horses, and protect the animals from illness. n.Lin.¹ Hetherd-stone, that is, an adder-stone, an ancient spindle-whorl. It is still believed that these objects are produced by adders, and that if one of them be suspended around the neck it will cure whooping-cough, ague, and adder bites. Hetherd-stung, bitten by an adder. When a swelling suddenly arises upon any animal without the cause being known it is said to be hetherd-stung. Hedgehogs and shrews are also said to bite animals and produce all the symptoms of the 'sting' of the hetherd. Dur. She let some kind of an etherthing venom'er, EGLESTONE Betty Podkins' Let. (1877) 8.

AISE, see Ash.

AISH, sb. Dor. [aif.] One of the strata of Purbeck beds.

Dor. Though associated with the Burr, this bed [aish] from its fissile or slaty character is easily separated from it, DAMON Geol. Weymouth (1860) 98. Dor. The tops of the longer stumps of trees pass through the burr into the aish, the uneven surface of which often serves to indicate the presence of trees beneath, ib. 115, ed. 1884; The aish bed is above the soft burr and under a bed of clay (J.H.M.).

AISH, see Arrish.

AISLE, sb. Sc. Yks. Lan. Chs. Wil. Som. Amer. [aɪl.]

1. A space for passage in any building; esp. the central thoroughfare in a mill, shop, &c. Cf. alley, sb.¹ I.

w. Yks. Aisle is used in Keighley for any passage between pews in a chapel, and the alley past the ends of looms; the interval where the weaver stands when at work being known as the gate (J.R.); Aisle, a passage between seats in any building. Aisle, Alley, are also used for the principal thoroughfare in a workshop, and must not be confused with loom-gate, nor with gangway (the thoroughfare between two buildings built overhead), nor with passage (a narrow way between two buildings). Gangway, passage, aisle, and alley have distinct meanings in our vernacular (B.K.). Lan. The passage between pews in a church is always called an aisle (S.W.); I have heard the space between the counters of a shop called the aisle in Liverpool, N. & Q. (1890) 7th S. x. 53. s. Chs. Any passage between pews (T.D.). w. Som.¹ Aisle, the passage between the pews in a church or chapel. No distinction is made between nave and aisles; but there is u aayul to every church; see Alley. [Amer. Instead of shopping they trade, and while thus engaged recognize a friend across the aisle, N. & Q. (1890) 7th S. ix. 406.]

2. A projection from the body of a church, one of the wings of a transept.

Per. (G.W.)

3. An enclosed and covered burial-place, adjoining to a church though not forming a part of it.

Sc. Donald was buried in the laird of Drum's aisle, SPALDING Hist. Troubles in Sc. (1792) II. 282 (JAM.). Abd. & Per. The burial-place of the laird's family is frequently called the aisle (G.W.).

4. Double rows of wheat-sheaves set up to dry.

s. Wil. MARSHALL Review (1817) V. 218.

[1. As up the ayle with mind disturb'd, I walk, RICHARDSON Pamela (N.E.D.). Fr. aille, Lat. āla, a wing. For the sense cp. BAILEY (1755): Isle, a long passage in a church or public building. This is the same word as ME. ile (yle), Fr. île, often Latinized as insula in legal documents. E. aisle owes its spelling to Fr. aille, and its pronunc. to Fr. île.]

AISLE, see Hazzle, v.

AISLE-TOOTH, see Axle-tooth.

AIT, sb.¹ Var. dial. Also written eyot. See below. [ait.] An island in a river; an osier-bed.

s. Not. The osier ait above the weirs, Not. Guard. (Aug. 8, 1895) 7. Wor. Ait, Nait, Eyot, island. Also applied to an osier-bed, whether an island or not (H.K.); The island now called the Neight at Deerhurst on the Severn, ALLIES Antiq. (1840) 188. s. Wor.¹ se. Wor.¹ Naight, an eyot, an osier bed. Brks.¹ Ait, or Aayte, a river-island, or flat on the bank with osiers growing. Mid. Fog up the river where it flows among green aits and meadows, DICKENS Bleak

House (1853) i. Hmp. They roosted in the aits of that river, WHITE Selborne (1788) 31, ed. 1853.

Hence Eyoty, adj. Of the nature of an ait or island.

Hmp.¹ That eyoty piece near the ford.

[He enjoyed a party of pleasure in a good boat on the water to one of the aits or aislets in the Thames, EDGEWORTH Patronage (1814) xix (DAV.); Ait, a little island in a river where osiers grow, BAILEY (1721). Merc. ēgeod, OE. īgeod, an islet, deriv. of īg, īeg, Merc. ēg, island. The termination with i is prob. due to French influence; cp. Fr. -et, -ot.]

A circle is made, termed the well, in the centre of which is placed a wooden peg, with a button balanced on the top. Those desirous of playing give buttons, marbles, or anything else, for the privilege of throwing a short stick, with which they are furnished, at the peg. Should the button fly out of the ring, the player is entitled to double the stipulated value of what he gives for the stick. The game is also practised at the Newcastle Races, and other places of amusement in the North, with three pegs, which are put into three circular holes, made in the ground, about two feet apart, and forming a triangle. In this case each hole contains a peg, about nine inches long, upon which are deposited either a small knife or some copper. The person playing gives so much for each stick, and gets all the articles that are thrown off so as to fall on the outside of the holes (HALL). ne.Lan.¹ O-i-t-well, the game 'three throws a penny.' Nhb.¹ They he' fornitor, an' crockery, an' byuts, an' shoes, an' aamacks o' things. Wm. I'd fun ev o' maes, Bayth coartin', en' feytin', BLEZARD Sngs. (1848) 33. w.Yks. A common phrase is 'all maks an' manders,' *Leeds Merc. AN-DOGS, sb. pl. Shr. Glo. Som. Dev. [æ'ndogz.] Andirons, the bars which support the ends of logs on a wood fire, or in which a spit turns.

Shr.¹ Andogs, obs. Glo. An-dogs, so called from the dogs' heads with which they were anciently ornamented, GROSE (1790) MS. add. (H.) Som. (F.H.) w.Som.¹ [Andogs] are still very commonly used in farm-houses, and others where wood is burnt. They are well described in the old-fashioned riddle, 'Head like an apple, Neck like a swan, Back like a long-dog, And dree legs to stan.' In large old-fashioned chimney-places it was usual to have two pairs of irons. The dogs, which were the most used, were at the middle of the hearth, and bore the fire always. The andirons stood on each side, and were only needed when an extra large fire was wanted. The latter, much larger and heavier, usually had some ornamental finish, as a brass head, a scroll, or a knob, and in kitchens the upright part of the iron was furnished with a row of hooks, one over the other, on the side away from the fire. On these hooks rested the great spit on which the meat or poultry was roasted. Both 'andirons' and 'dogs' have now become 'hand-dogs' (s.v. Hand-dogs). Dev. 'Andugs, HEWETT Peas. Sp. (1892) 46. n.Dev. GROSE (1790) MS. add. (H.)

[Another common name for 'andirons' was 'fire-dogs' or 'dogs.' An-dog is prob. a contamination of these two words. Cp. Fr. chenet (der. of chien, dog), an andiron. See Andier-dogs.]

Their faces were by this time flushed with shame, that they should be thus cuffed about by the auld thief, as they styled him, Perils of Men, III. 38 (JAM.). Auld wife is so called on account of its likeness to an old woman's head enveloped in a flannel cap. During high winds old-wives and pig-taps [i. e. tops of chimneys] are apt to be thrown down, and street walking is dangerous. Hence the severity of a storm, and one's courage in braving it, came to be represented by the expression, 'raining auld-wives and pig-taps,' which became corrupted into 'raining auld-wives and pikestaffs' (JAM. Suppl.). Sik. There goes an auld woman frae the chumley-tap, CHR. NORTH Noctes (1834) IV. 178, ed. 1856.

2. A rude kind of cricket, in which usually the bat is replaced by a 'besom-stale' and the ball by a piece of stick or 'bad.'

w.Yks. The 'bad' was thrown with a whirling motion to the boy with the 'steyl,' who struck the 'bad' and then ran to the goal-stone, which counted one, and back again, if there was time, which counted two. The 'bad' was thrown in to either the stone at which the player stood to strike, or the goal-stone, and if it struck either stone before the player touched it with the hedge-stake, he was out (M.F.). w.Yks.² Lakin' at bad means playing at bat, a rude kind of cricket, with a bat and ball, and wall topplings for wickets. There was no lakin' at bad sixty years ago; they call it 'cricket' naa. Lan. Playing at t'bad, HARLAND & WILKINSON Leg. (1873) 150; (J.L.)

BAESSY-FLAAS, sb. pl. Sh.I. Litter for cattle, composed of heather and dry earth.

Sh.I. Still used, but more frequently the words are heard separately. A baesy or bizzy is just the compact mass of litter composed of heather or straw and dry earth, which has accumulated in a cow-house for so long that it has to be torn off the floor. Each piece would be a flaa, just what is 'flayed off' (K.I.), S. & Ork.¹

[Baessy is cogn. w. Norw. dial. bysja, to strew the floor with coarse grass, leaves, or straw (AASEN). See Flaa.]

1. A blow, stroke, shot; a dull, heavy thud.

Sc. For fear John Heatherblutter, or some siecan dare-the-deil, should tak a baff at them, SCOTT Waverley (1814) lxxi; To hae a baff at the popinjay, ib. Old Mortality (1816) vii; He gaff Clark's broggit-staff Siecan a baff, DRUMMOND Muckonachy (1846) 35; For a whole hour they would hae been at it, baff for baff, ROY Horseman (1895) i. n.Sc. GROSE (1790) MS. add. (C.); He cam doon wi' a bef on's doup (W.G.).

Sc. (JAM. Suppl.)

[Brabant dial. baf, baffe, a blow (Idiol. 26, cited in SCHUERMANS Suppl.). Cp. G. baf, interj. 'fragorem indicans,' and baffen, to strike (GRIMM).]

BAFF, *sb.*² Yks. [baf.] A suppressed bark.

n.Yks. (I.W.) w.Yks. The suppressed bark of a dog, the ghost of a sound, DYER Dial. (1891) 95.

[The same as Baff, v.²]

BAFF, *sb.*³ Sh.I. [baf.] A cold, the effects of exposure to cold.

Sh.I. A dose of cold after exposure to bad weather (K.I.), S. & Ork.¹

[Perh. the same word as Baff, *sb.*²; see Baff, v.², 2.]

BAFF, adj. Nhb. Dur. [baf.]

1. Of cards: valueless, worthless; not a trump.

Nhb. 'Th's nec use playin, aa've gotten sic a baff hand.' Said by a partner who has received a bad deal in the game of whist (R.O.H.); Aa had some pictors but a bad, baff hand (T.E.F.); Nhb.¹

2. Of wood: useless, worthless. See Baff-end.

Nhb. The outer or 'sappy' portion of a tree is valueless for joinery. In a plank this 'sappy' part is called the baff-edge, and is cut off and thrown aside for firewood. A foreman's instruction to his joiner is thus given: 'Rip the baff-edge off' [saw off the useless edge] (R.O.H.).

3. Of a week or day: the alternate week or day of that week on which the fortnightly wages are not paid.

N.Cy.¹ The week in which pitmen receive no pay is called the 'baff-week.' Nhb. Several collieries in Northumberland ... decided to cancel their recent voting in favour of not working on 'baff' Saturday. It is expected that other collieries will follow in the footsteps of the workmen of East Holywell, who were, it is understood, about the first to make the proposition in favour of the abolition of work on a 'baff' Saturday, Newc. Wkly. Chron. (Dec. 14, 1889) 8, col. 4; The newspapers reported an agitation at the collieries to have Baff-Saturday made a holiday as well as Pay-Saturday (A.S.P.); Mining workmen are usually paid fortnightly on 'Pay' Fridays. The following day is called 'Pay Saturday,' and the alternate Saturday 'Baff Saturday,' Gl. Lab. (1894); *Nhb.*¹ A pitman, if paid fortnightly, speaks of the alternate weeks as 'the baff week,' and 'the pay week.' The Baff week is o'er—no repining—Pay Saturday's swift on the wing, ROBSON Collier's Pay Week (1863) 237. Nhb., Dur. GREENWELL Coal Tr. Gl. (1849); NICHOLSON Coal Tr. Gl. (1888).

[The same word as Bauch.]

BAFF, *v.*¹ Sc. Also written beff (JAM.). [baf, bef.]

1. To beat, to strike.

Sc. (JAM.); GROSE (1790) MS. add. (C.); Has ne'er in Monymusk been seen Sae mony weel-beft skins, SKINNER Poems (1859) 12. n.Sc. (W.G.)

2. To strike the ground with the sole of the club-head in playing golf.

Sc. (JAM. Suppl.)

3. To struggle, either against illness or weather.

Sh.I. Used when speaking of struggling with any illness, but chiefly when speaking of animals, suffering uneasily (K.I.). *S. & Ork.*¹ To buffet a storm.

[The same word as Baff, sb.]

BAFF, *v.*² Yks. Lin. Also written bef *w.Yks.*⁵; beff *n.Lin.*¹ [baf, bef.]

1. To bark gently, in a low tone.

*m.Yks.*¹ A dog bafis when it dares not bark, though it may happen that it commits itself in the latter way at intervals.

Hence Baffing, (1) vbl. sb.; (2) ppl. adj.

(1) *Lin.*¹, *n.Lin.*¹ (2) *w.Yks.*² When a dog hunts for game in a wood he is said to make a baffing noise.

2. To cough, to hack.

*w.Yks.*⁵ To cough short, with little movement, and a quick noise; generally prelusive to a violent 'coughing bout.' Coughing an' beffing t'daay through.

Hence Baffing, vbl. sb. coughing, hacking.

*n.Lin.*¹

[To baffe, as a dog, latrare, LEVINS Manip.; Baffyn as howndys, baulo, bafo, latro, Prompt. Cp. Du. baffen, to barke (HEXHAM); MHG. baffen (LEXER); Bavar. dial. baffen, beffen, to bark like a fox, to quarrel (SCHMELLER).]

BAFF, *v.*² Sh.I. [baf.] To bathe an injured part to give it relief.

Sh.I. (K.I.)

BAFF-END, sb. Nhb. Dur. [ba'fend.]

1. The partly decayed or root end of a tree or log.

*Nhb.*¹ The partly decayed, split, or root end of a log or tree of timber is called the baff end; and from the baff ends, or otherwise useless pieces or ends of timber, are cut baffs, which are used to keep the wooden cribs in position, when sinking pits in our North-Country.

Hence Baff-ended, ppl. adj. worthless, blunted.

*N.Cy.*¹ Picks are so called when the points are off. *Nhb.*¹

2. A wooden wedge used to keep cribs in position.

Nhb. A kind of blunt wedges driven in behind the cribbing in order to pack up the space behind. Odds and ends of timber are cut up for the purpose, and any waste ends of wood will do for it (R.O.H.). Nhb., Dur. GREENWELL Coal Tr. Gl. (1849).

[Baff, the same word as Baff, adj.]

BAFFER, sb. Sh.I. A struggle.

Sh.I. (K.I.) *S. & Ork.*¹ To get a baffer, to have a struggle against a storm.

[Baff, *vb.*¹ + -er.]

BAFFLE, sb. Sc. A trifle, thing of no value.

*S. & Ork.*¹, Or.I., Sth. (JAM.)

[A der. of baff (adj.), q.v. It is the same word as Bauchle.]

1. To confuse, perplex, worry, annoy.

*s.Cha.*¹ The questions put to a candidate at a political meeting were said to be intended to baffle him. *Lei.*¹ s.Wor. A robin singing and flying about in church, caused the clergyman to hesitate and stumble painfully and to conclude his sermon abruptly. The comment of the congregation was, 'That there robin fairly baffled the parson' (R.M.E.). *Shr.*¹ I knowed right well 'e wuz tellin' me a lie, so I cross-waund 'im a bit an' soon boffled 'is story. *Glo.*¹, *Oxf.*¹

Hence (1) Boffled, pp. confused, rendered stupid; (2) Bofflement, sb. a bother, state of perplexity.

(1) *Sur.*¹ A fox that has been repeatedly headed and prevented from making his point is said 'to be regularly boffled.' (2) *Glo.*¹

2. To impede, obstruct, thwart, balk.

a.Stf. I shall hit the mark if yo' wo' boffle me just as I'm shootin', PINNOCK Blk. Cy. Ann. (1895). *sw.Lin.*¹ They seem to baffle us off any-how. *Nhp.*¹ The grass was so long, it quite boffled me to get through it. *War.*² This long grass boffles my feet. When I start to jump, keep still, or else yo'll boffle me. Wor. Used of almost any hindrance. When a boy is writing and another shakes his arm he says, 'I wishes a'd mind wot a be atter, 'ee keps boffin' mah.' 'Ee maakes sich a despret 'nise, I con't read nothin, a boffles mah (H.K.). *se.Wor.*¹ *Ken.*¹ I should ha' been here afore now, only for de wind, that's what boffled me. e.Sus. HOLLOWAY.

Hence Baffling, ppl. adj. impeding, obstructing.

Sus. Nothing is more common at sea than to speak of a 'baffling wind,' in the sense of a wind that varies so as to prevent a steady course from being held (R.H.C.).

3. To twist irregularly, entangle; cf. bauchle.

*e.An.*¹ Nhp. N. & O. (1889) 7th S. vii. 337; *Nhp.*¹ Applied to corn or grass irregularly beaten down by wind or rain. 'Seralily' is synonymous; but if grain be regularly beaten down in one direction it is said to be 'laired.'

Hence Baffled, ppl. adj. beaten about, entangled.

*Nrf.*¹ Standing corn or grass, beat about by the wind or stray cattle, are said to be 'baffled about' or baffled. Nickled, snaffled, and walted, are other terms applied to standing corn beat about by wind or rain. Suf. RAINBIRD Agric. (1819) 287, ed. 1849; *Suf.*¹

4. To cheat, humbug, make a fool of.

Lei. Used to describe a cattle-dealer (for instance) trying to get round a purchaser to buy his cattle, so as to gain an advantage over him (C.E.); *Lei.*¹, *e.An.*¹

5. Of children or animals: to manage capriciously, to bring up badly.

*e.An.*¹ He was sadly baffled in his bringing up. *Nrf.*¹

6. To insult, bully, tease.

7. To strike, beat.

*Lei.*¹ Oi boffled un o'er the yead wi' the mop. *Nrf.*¹ *Suf.*¹ 'A [he] baffled 'em about the hid.

[1. Baffled, confounded, ASH (1795). 2. To baffle [disappoint], frustrator, COLES (1679). 4. To baffle, or befool one, deludere, ROBERTSON Phras. (1693); But friends are men, and love can baffle lords, GREENE Fr.

Bacon (c. 1590) v. 83. 6. Alas, poor fool, how have they baffled thee! SHAKS. Twelfth Ni. v. i. 377.]

BAFFLER, sb. Chs. War. [ba'flə(r).] A top rail to a sunk fence or wall.

*Chs.*¹³ A rail to 'baffle' any attempt of cattle, but particularly sheep, to break fence. War. (J.R.W.)

[Baffle, vb. + -er.]

BAFFLES, sb. pl. Nhp. [bæ'flz.] Gaiters, leggings. See Boffers.

*Nhb.*¹ It is esteemed very unlucky to produce the bafflet until the fish are drawn ashore.

[Baffle, vb. 7 + -et.]

BAFFOUND, v. Yks. To perplex, bewilder.

*m.Yks.*¹ Thou'd baffound a stoop! [post.]

Hence (1) Baffounded, ppl. adj. perplexed, bewildered; (2) Baffounding, ppl. adj. perplexing, bewildering.

(1) n.Yks. Ah was gettin' about baffounded, nut bein' an able-bodied man, LINSKILL Haven under Hill (1886) vii; *n.Yks.*¹ (2) *n.Yks.*² He had a baffounding way with him [a cross-questioning or harassing manner].

BAFFUM, see Bargham.

BAG, sb. Var. dial. uses in Sc. Irel. Eng. [bag, bæg.]

1. A sack.

*Chs.*¹ *s.Chs.*¹ A bag o' corn. *Glo.*²

2. A dry measure of quantity or weight varying according to locality and the nature of the contents. Of wheat, potatoes, &c., gen. equivalent to three bushels.

*Chs.*¹ Farmers frequently speak of having so many bags of wheat per acre; in which case a sack containing four bushels is intended. s.Chs.¹ A bag o' curn. *Leil.*¹, *Hrf.*² *War.*³ A bag of potatoes contained so many pots, a bag of coal so many pounds, and a bag of coke so many bushels. se.*Wor.*¹ Shr. *MORTON Cyclo. BAGS, sb. pl. Obs. Lin. The upper part of peat, intermixed with roots of grass, cut for fuel.

nw.Lin. In current use 40 or 50 years ago. Since then peat-cutting has not been carried on, and the word has fallen out of use (A.A.). n.Lin.¹ It is laide in paine that none of the said inhabitants shall grave or shote any bagges beneath Micklehouses or Triplinghouses, or beneath any sik, betwene them in paine of every load to the contrarie, xii¹, Scotter Manor Roll (Oct. 11, 1599) in Arch. XLVI. 388. Bagmoor, near Burton-upon-Stather, possibly derives its name from these bags. There is a place called Newington Bagpath, in Gloucestershire. The spot on which the battle of the Standard was fought was, it is affirmed, at one time called Bagmore, perhaps because bags were wont to be cut there.

BAGS, sb. pl. Obs. Chs. Old name for the commercial traveller, who used to carry his samples with him on horseback, in a pair of saddle-bags.

BAGSKIN, sb. Chs. [ba'gskin.] The stomach of a calf cleaned, salted, and cut up, used for curdling milk in the process of cheese-making.

Chs.¹ The stomach of a calf cleaned and laid in salt, used for curdling the milk in the process of cheese-making. Bagskins are dried by stretching them upon pieces of stick, in which form they are cleaner, and can be kept almost any length of time. Some dairy-maids prefer them wet, and some dry. The preparation of the bagskins is almost a special branch of trade. It is thus described by Sir Henry Holland in his General View of the Agriculture of Cheshire (1801): 'When it [the maw-skin] comes from the butcher, the chyley matter is taken out, and the skin cleared from slime and every apparent impurity, by wiping or a gentle washing; the skin is then filled nearly full of salt, and placing a layer of salt upon the bottom of a mug, the skin is laid flat upon it; the mug is large enough to hold three skins in a course: each course of skins should be covered with salt, and when a sufficient number of skins are thus placed in the mug, that mug should be filled up with salt, and with a dish or slate over it, be put into a cool place, till the approach of the cheese-making season, in the following year. The skins are then all taken out, laid for the brine to drain from them, and being spread upon a table, they are powdered on each side with fine salt, and are rolled smooth with a paste roller, which presses in the salt; after that, a thin splint of wood is stuck across each of them, to keep them extended while they are hung to dry.' Chs.² s.Chs.¹ Also called Steep-skin.

BAITIE, sb. Nhb. A fisher girl who gathers bait.

Nhb. Baities are the wives and daughters of fishermen, and are accustomed to do nearly all the work required on shore; namely, procuring bait, baiting the many hundred hooks, receiving and selling the fish when landed, &c. These women are proverbially industrious and possess great physical powers. They are trained from childhood to carry loads, small creels being made for the children to carry, and laden proportionately to their strength. The chief bait used is mussels, which form a very heavy load, and which have to be carried from great distances. The other baits are sand-worms, limpets, and dog-crabs—all of which are dug for or gathered by the women (R.O.H.); Nhb.¹

BANG-A-BONK, phr. Stf. To sit lazily on a bank.

Stf. 1 [Not known to our correspondents].

BANG ABOUT, phr. Lan. A game known also as

'Please or displease,' see below.

Lan. Both an indoor and outdoor game. In the former case the players, with one exception, would be seated round a room, generally having a scramble for seats, the last to be placed, or the one unaccommodated, having to stand in the centre, holding a handkerchief knotted at one end. Then the seated players beckoned to one another to change places, the knotted kerchief being freely plied on those crossing the room, unless the wielder could slip into a seat and so relinquish the post of banger. The outdoor game was something similar, the players standing either in opposite rows or in a ring, Manch. City News (June 20, 1896); The mode of playing is for the company, one sex, say the females, each to sit down on a chair and choose a partner, who goes and sits upon her knee until the chairs are filled. Each female is asked by the banger if she is satisfied with her partner. If she answers in the affirmative, she shows the company that she is so satisfied by kissing her partner. On the second circle she calls out the name of another male in the company, who has to answer the call by hastening to the knee of the female who has called, so that the two men must hasten to change places. During this time of changing, the banger lays his knout about the backs of these two changers. [Later] the chairs are changed, and a female banger takes the place of the male banger; the females sit upon the knees of the males, and the operation of changing seats and banging the changers is repeated, ib.; Engaged in the games of . . . bang about and shedding copies, HARLAND & WILKINSON Flk-Lore (1867) 255; We play'd ut blindmon's buff, bang-abeawt, an' a lot moor games, FERGUSON Moudywarb, 30.

'Oh, you've got your tenth bargain' was once said to a man whose wife was just delivered of her tenth daughter (P.W.J.).

7. In phr. (1) a dear bargain, see below; (2) bargain o' foolery, stuff and nonsense, or a stupid and empty thing.

(1) Ant. A drunken husband or mismanaging wife would be called by the neighbours a dear bargain. Dear knows, he was a dear bargain, Ballymena Obs. (1892); If a man got some sort of present that was expensive to keep up—a sort of 'white elephant'—it would be said 'He has got a dear bargain.' The phr. is in very gen. local use (W.J.K.). (2) Suf. e.An. Dy. Times (1892).

II. 1. An indefinite number or quantity of anything.

e.An.¹ Two good tidy bargains of hay from an acre. A poor bargain of wool from three score hoggets. Nrf. I have a good bargain of corn this year—or a good bargain of lambs, GROSE (1790); Nrf.¹ A sad bargain of lazy chaps. Suf. A small bargain. A good tidy bargain, e.An. Dy. Times (1892); CULLUM Hist. Hausted (1813); Suf.¹

BARGE, *v.*² Wil. [bädz.] To cut brushwood off a hedge-bank and ditch.

Wil.¹ Before a hedge can be 'laid,' all its side, as well as the rough thorns, brambles, &c., growing in the ditch, must be cut off. This is called 'barging out' the ditch.

Hence Bargin, vbl. sb. the overgrowth of a hedge, trimmed off before the hedge can be 'laid.'

Wil.¹

BARGE-DAY, sb. Nhb. Ascension Day, so called from the barge procession formerly held on that day.

N.Cy.¹ Nhb. Denham Tracts (ed. 1892) l. 306; Nhb.¹ Ascension-Day, on which the Mayor and Corporation of Newcastle, with the Master and Elder Brethren of the Trinity House, in their respective state barges, rowed over the tidal limits of the river Tyne from the Spar Hawk to Hedwin Streams, within which the Corporation of Newcastle claimed right to the soil of the river. As an annual custom this has been abandoned, but is now carried out at longer intervals with little of the ancient pomp and pageantry which formerly characterised it. O would the Tyne but cease to flow, Or, like a small burn, bubble, There would not be a barge-day now, GILCHRIST Bards of the Tyne (1835) 398.

BARK, v.¹ Sc. Irel. Nhb. Cum. Wm. Yks. Lan. Stf. Der. Not. Lin. War. Wor. Shr. Brks. Dev. [bark, bāk.]

1. To strip a tree of its bark, esp. for the purpose of tanning.

Sc. (JAM.)

Hence (1) Barked, ppl. adj. stripped of bark; (2) Barker, sb. (a) a person employed in stripping or rinding trees; (b) a rubber or whetstone used for sharpening scythes; (3) Barking-iron, an iron tool used in peeling off bark from trees.

(1) Sc. A barkit aik-snag, SCOTT Rob Roy (1817) xxi; (JAM.)

(2) Dev. w. Times (Feb. 26, 1886) 2, col. 2; In some places in Dev. barker is applied to a piece of wood used in the same way as the stone balker, and for the same purpose, viz. sharpening scythes in the field (R.P.C.). (3) se.Wor.¹

2. To tan leather.

Sc. Tanning is thus denominated, because the bark of trees is the great article used in this operation (JAM.).

Hence Barked, ppl. adj. tanned.

Sc. Twa buits of barkit blasint leather, RAMSAY Tea-Table Misc. (1724) I. 175, ed. 1871.

3. To knock or rub off the skin, esp. from the shins.

Sc. To bark one's shins, is to take the skin off the ancles by a blow or fall, so that in healing a crust is formed (A.W.). Nhb.¹ Cum.¹ He bark't his nockles ower tudder fellow's skope. Wm.¹

BARKER, see Balker.

BARKER'S KNEE, phr. Cor. See below.

Cor. Barker did not believe in 'knockers' [mine-fairies, gnomes]; one day he got amongst a lot of them, who threw their mining tools at him, and hitting him on the knee he ever afterwards walked stiffly (M.A.C.); Cor.² Hunt, in his Romances of the W. of Eng., says that the fairies called buccas, or knockers, once left all their tools on Barker's knee. The knee was so injured that it continued stiff ever after. 'As stiff as Barker's knee' became a proverb. Who Barker was is not stated.

BARNACLES, sb. pl. Sc. Cum. Chs. Der. Lin. Lei. Nhp. War. Wor. Shr. e.An. Sus. Wil. Som. [bə'niklz, bā'niklz.]

1. An instrument applied to the nose of a savage bull, or of a restive horse when being shod. Hence fig. irons worn by felons in gaol.

n.Cy. The instrument called a barnacle or brake, put on the nose of unruly horses, GROSE (1790) MS. add. (C.) Cum. Ye'll want . . . the ass's barnicles to keep your tongue in your mouth, CARNE Shad. Crime (1885) 33; *Cum.*¹ *Nhp.*¹ *Shr.*¹ Obsol. The barnacles are somewhat like the figure 8 in form, consisting of two rings connected midway by short bars, through which a screw passes. The upper ring is jointed in the centre, while the lower one is correspondingly divided. This is put into the bull's nostrils, and held there by the screw which serves to tighten the barnacles at pleasure. The upper ring is attached to the point of each horn by means of a chain, thus keeping the lower one from dropping and impeding the animal while grazing. 'It gies the bñll plenty to do to think on 'is nose w'en the barnacles bin on,' said the village blacksmith of Tilstock. Cant. The irons worn in gaols, Life B. M. Carew (1791).

2. Hooks attached to chains, used in salt-mining.

*Chs.*¹ A pair of chains with two hooks to hook on each side of the tub when drawing rock salt.

3. Spectacles; eyeglasses. In gen. dial. and colloq. use.

BARNARD CASTLE, sb. Dur. A term of reproach.

Dur. Barnard Castle, a Briggate bred-un. That is a female of a certain class born in Barnard Castle, and bred up in that Billingsgate portion of the town, yecept Briggate, Denham Tracts (ed. 1892) I. 104; A coward! a coward! o' Barney Castle Dare na come out to fight a battle! A very common saying. In all probability refers to the 'Rising in the North,' 1569, and esp. to Sir George Bowes who had shut himself up in Barnard Castle. Sir Cuthbert Sharp notices this reproachful saying in his Memorials of the Rebellion, ib. 98; In Sunderland fifty years ago, a common taunt was 'A coward, a coward, o' Barney Castle!' I stopped to listen to two viragos . . . holding a 'slanging' contest; . . . what appeared the most pungent and irritating, as well as laconic, epithets were resorted to, 'Barney Castles!' and 'Bewcastle!' banded from side to side, Flk-Lore Jrn. (1883) VI. 228.

BARNAUGH-BLOW, sb. ? Obs. Irel. The goal or winning stroke.

Wxf. Not now in use (P.J.M.); *Wxf.*¹ A barnaugh blow might have been a critical, a judging blow. Mot. all arkagh var ee barnaugh-blowe [but all eager for the great stroke], 88.

BARN-BRACK, sb. Irel. A large sweetened. bun containing currants.

Ir. On St. Bridget's Eve every farmer's wife in Ireland makes

3. A blunder; a piece of bad workmanship.

w.Yks. Tha'rt makin' a barney o' that (S.K.C.).

BARNEY BRIDGE, sb. Irel. A children's game.

Uls. Still played. Two children take uplifted hands forming an arch through which the others pass in single file, holding on to the coat or dress of the one in front. The last to pass through is caught by a sudden lowering of the arch of hands and arms (R.M.Y.). Ant. The game of Barney bridge is still played (S.A.B.); A common child's game here. The town children also know it by its Eng. name 'Oranges and Lemons.' In the Ards, the game is also called 'broken bridges' (M.B.-S.). *n.I.*¹ In playing it the following rhyming dialogue is used: 'How many miles to Barney bridge?—Three score and ten.—Will I be there by candle light?—Yes, if your legs be long;' &c.

BARNGUN, sb. Som. Dev. Also in form barney-gun *w.Som.*¹ [bā'n-gŏn]. An eruption on the skin; and specifically, shingles.

*w.Som.*¹ They zes how tis the barney-gun [shingles], but I sure you I ant got no paice way un [i.e. my husband] day nor night, he's proper rampin like. Dev. 'Thou art not come to me,' she said, looking through my simple face as if it were but glass, 'to be struck for bone-shave, nor to be blessed for barn-gun,' BLACKMORE Lorna Doone (1869) xviii; When I were bad with the barngun, O'NEILL Idylls (1892) 87. n.Dev. Vorewey [immediately] struck out and come to a barngun, Exm. Crisp. (1746) I. 557; Monthly Mag. (1808) II. 422; GROSE (1790). *Dev.*¹ It is a common but unfounded belief, that if the extremities of the zone [of shingles] meet, the patient will certainly perish.

[Barn (OE. beornan, to burn) + gun, see Gound.]

BARNING, sb. Obs. Hrt. Barn-buildings.

Hrt. They keep whole bays of barning full of turnips, ELLIS Mod. Husb. (1750) VI. ii.

With this word we may compare the word burnish, a hunter's term: To burnish, apply'd to harts spreading their horns after they are fray'd or new rubbed, KERSEY (1715); so English Expositor (1641), BULLOKAR (1616).]

BARNISH, see Bairnish.

BARNISH YOU, phr. Dev. [bā'nif i]. A mild imprecation. Cf. burn-you.

*Dev.*¹ A common imprecation of the same import as Burn-you; *Dev.*² Barnish ee. Ot's 'bout now than, yū young murthy-making dow! Kessen let not alone, can'st!

BARNKYN, see Barmkin.

BARNSTAPLE FAIR WEATHER, phr. Dev. Cold, wet, windy weather.

Dev. Yesterday the clerk of the weather made a desperate effort to restore what is understood to be the normal balance of proportion between fine days and thunderstorms in this country. He has still a good deal of lee-way to make up, but he has plenty of time to do it in. According to Dr. Falb, the eminent Austrian meteorologist, the months of July, August, and September are to be devoted to this unpleasant process. Throughout all this period—and particularly in September—what Devonians out of their experience call 'Barnstaple Fair weather' is to prevail in England, Daily Graphic (Apr. 21, 1893); *Dev.*² A stormy, cold, foggy day is usually spoken of as Barum-fair-weather, Barum being the local name for Barnstaple.

5. A round or barrel-shaped part of a loom or spinning-wheel. See below.

Fif. We pulled the cards on the barrell, ROBERTSON Provost (1894) 127. Shr.¹ Obs. An appendage proper to the little wheel [used for spinning hemp and flax], a reel round which the linen yarn was wound as it was spun. It was, in form, somewhat like a dumb-bell of slender proportions. The cylinder was hollow, to admit the spindle, and one of its circular ends was flat and capable of being removed: when the reel was required to be put on the spindle, this end was taken off for that purpose, and being again screwed on, the whole affair was ready for the rotatory operation of winding. The yarn was conducted to the barrel through the upper part of two 'wings,' as they were called,—pieces of wood, curved somewhat like the 'merry-thought' of a fowl,—permanently affixed near to the extremity of the spindle: the barrel, when put on at the opposite end, was pushed up to these 'wings,' which extended beyond its circumference, and thus regulated the quantity of yarn it was required to hold.

6. The curve of the surface of a road.

BARRING OUT, phr. Obsol. Nhb. Dur. Cum. Wm. Yks. Lan. Der. The annual custom among schoolboys, usually observed shortly before Christmas, of shutting out the schoolmaster from the room or house, in order to demand a holiday, &c.

n.Cy. The breaking up of a school at the great holidays when the boys within bar the door against the master, GROSE (1790) MS. add. (P.) Nhb.¹ On the 6th of December [St. Nicholas' Day] the schoolmaster found the school door locked in his face and barricaded with forms to prevent his entrance until the scholars within obtained from him in writing a list of holidays for the ensuing year. Obsol. (s.v. Nicholas'-Day). Dur. The custom is retained in the Grammar school in the city of Durham, where the scholars bar out the master, and forcibly obtain from him what they call Orders. . . . There is a similar custom at the school of Houghton-le-Spring, BRAND Pop. Antiq. (ed. 1849) 441; Dur.¹ A custom in some of the smaller schools in the north. [Sometimes also] on the day of 'breaking up' for the holidays, a small subscription is entered into and a mixture made of ale, sweetened and seasoned so as to be agreeable. The song or glee is then introduced. Cum. Auld fwok like me hev seen some rare barrins' oot, RICHARDSON Talk (1886) 19; Cum.¹ Cum., Wm. In September or October the master is locked out of the school by the scholars, who, previous to his admittance, give an account of the different holidays for the ensuing year, which he promises to observe, and signs his name to the orders, as they are called, with two bondsmen. The return of these signed orders is the signal of capitulation; the doors are immediately opened; beef, beer, and wine deck the festive board; and the day is spent in mirth, BRAND Pop. Antiq. (ed. 1849) 450. Wm. Weed pae t'maestre off fort when t'barrin'-oot dae com, Spec. (1880) pt. ii. 9. w.Yks. Hlfx. Wds.; (J.T.); w.Yks.¹ Enjoyed by schoolboys at the approaching holidays; w.Yks.² The barring-out took place on the last day of April. Lan. About the commencement of the present century, a barring-out took place at Ormskirk Grammar School, a few days before the usual period of the Christmas holidays, BRAND Pop. Antiq. (ed. 1849) 444. n.Lan.¹ The door being secured, two captains were elected; generally the selection was influenced by the position and circumstances of the parents. Each captain then selected a clerk, who entered the names of the boys as they were called to their respective sides. The school was then divided into two parties, and the preliminaries were then settled for a game at football on the holiday which the master was sure to grant. ne.Lan.¹ An ancient custom at schools, until lately prevalent, when the boys at the commencement of harvest bar out the master from the school, and demand the day's holiday. Der.¹² Towards the end of November, when days are short, the boys were wont to fasten the door upon the master, and not to let him enter till he had granted them certain conditions, &c.; but this is in a manner now left off. nw.Der.¹

Nhb., Dur. Formerly, before the application of tramways underground, coals used to be conveyed in barrows, whence the name barrowman, GREENWELL Coal Tr. Gl. (1849). Nhb.¹ Trams in a pit were formerly worked by putters and barrowmen, the latter pulling before, and the former putting or thrusting behind: boys about fifteen or sixteen years old are employed in this department of the colliery, HODGSON Descr. of Felling Colliery (c. 1812). There is another sort of labourers which are called Barrow-men, or Coal-Putters; these persons take the hewed coal from the hewers as they work them, or as fast as they can, and filling the corves with these wrought coals, put or pull away the full corves of coals, which are set, when empty, upon a sledge of wood, and so 'halled' all along the barrow-way to the pit shaft by two or three persons, one before and another behind the corfe, J. C. Complait Collier (1708) 36. (5) Rxb. When man and wife draw well together, each is said to keep up his or her ain barrow-steel. BATTLEDEER, see Battledore.

1. A flat wooden implement, in shape resembling a cricket-bat, used as a substitute for the mangle in smoothing linen after washing, or in the process of bleaching. Obsol.

Cum. With the battledore, webs were battled or cleaned after their daily extension and watering on the grass, pinned out by wooden pegs, in the sunshine along the sear (M.P.); Cum.¹ (s.v. Batlin stick). n.Yks. On their washing-nights the strokes of the 'battledoor'—that is, the old-fashioned implement for smoothing newly-washed linen, which has been superseded by the mangle—were heard as far as Runswick, ATKINSON Moorl. Parish (1891) 53; Deame sit te wark te battledeer the cleas, FETHERSTON Goor-krodger (1870) 78; (I.W.); n.Yks.¹ One portion of the former substitute for the mangle, not yet fallen into entire disuse; called also the Bittle. The other portion is called the Pin, or the Rolling-pin, and in shape and dimensions very much resembles the roller of a small mangle. The battel-door is a heavy piece of wood, with a handle, like that of a cricket-bat, at one end, flat on both sides and about four to five inches wide. The linen to be operated upon is wound round the pin and then rolled backwards and forwards on a linen-board under the battel-door, subjected to whatever amount of pressure the laundress is able or disposed to put upon it. The process is not unaccompanied with noise from the clapping of the wood upon wood, or upon the linen rolled on the wooden pin, and it is this clapping noise that is, at least in part, implied in the various local legends touching Fairy linen-washing. ne.Yks.¹, e.Yks.¹ n.Lin.¹ Very rarely used now.

2. A flat wooden instrument used in mending thatch. Cf. battling-board, s.v. Battling.

Nhp.¹ A battledore is about a foot long and six inches broad, with a slit at one end for the hand. Used to shore or push the ends of the new straw under the old thatch. Called on the e. side of the county a Gillet, on the n. a Stin-ger.

3. A child's horn-book. Obsol. or Obs.

Nhb.¹ A flat board with a handle like a battledore. On the wide face of this a card was fastened, having ABC and other elementary characters upon it. To protect the card from the constant contact of the wooden skewer used as a pointer in teaching, a sheet of horn was nailed over the face. Hence the name 'horn-book.' Battledore is transferred to the folding child's alphabet card, still for sale (1891) in booksellers' shops. w.Yks. They went ta Huthersfield ta buy im a battledoor. The prize were a penne; thinken it too deer they bout 12 for 9d. Went hoam, an ther gurt hoblen lad larnd ta read his batteldoors, Orig. Speech at Cleckheaton. Der.¹ n.Lin.¹ A piece of cardboard on which was printed the ABC, the Lord's Prayer, and a few short syllables, employed as a substitute for the horn-book. Battledoors were in use here, in dame's schools, in 1843, and probably much later. The saying, 'He duzn't know his A B C fra a battledoor,' refers to this. I.W.² A child's first primer, containing the alphabet, numerals, &c., on thick coarse paper, made to fold; generally sold by pedlars.

4. A flat-eared variety of barley. Also in comp. Battledore-barley.

Nhb. Battle-door or sprat-barley is sometimes grown and is preferred for sowing upon land in high condition, MARSHALL Review (1808) I. 77; Nhb.¹ n.Yks. TUKE Agric. (1800) 119. Wil.¹

BATTLING, vbl. sb. Obsol. Nhb. Cum. Wm. Yks. Amer.

1. The process of beating linen, either to clean it, or to soften the coarse home-spun webs before being worn. Cf. batle, v.¹

Cum. All home-spun webs used to undergo this process at intervals, after boiling with soap and wood ashes (M.P.).

2. Comp. (1) Battling-stick, a 'battledore' (q.v.) or flat stick used in beating linen; (2) -steean, -stone, a large flat stone upon which linen was laid to be beaten; (3) -wood, see Battling-stick.

(1) Cum.¹ [Used] for beating the linen web previous to its being laid on the grass to bleach. [U.S.A., Tenn. Dial. Notes (1895) 370.] (2) n.Cy. A smooth, heavy, flat-sided stone, set a little aslope by the side of a brook or river, whereon to beat or battle clothes with a batting-stick, after they have been soaked in wood ashes or other bleaching lies (J.H.). Nhb.¹ (s.v. Battle.) Cum. Battlin' stean or stone was a large, flat-topped blue cobble, or boulder, fixed firmly in the brae-edge of the river Eden. It was above the ordinary level of the stream, and sloped slightly outwards, so that the water and whatever with it was beaten out of the web, as it was turned and changed and re-beaten or battled, might run into the stream again (M.P.); The coat had been growing hard with the frost. 'This wants the battling stone ower it,' said the old weaver, CAINE Shad. Crime (1885) 32; Cnm.¹ Wm. Lonsdale Mag. (1822) III. 291. n.Yks.² Batlingsteenan. (3) Wm. The shirts being steeped in the water, were laid in folds upon the stone, and beat with a battling wood, Lonsdale Mag. (1822) III. 291.

BAUCH, adj. Sc. Nhb. Cum. Yks. Also written baach (JAM.); bagh-w.Yks.; baugh (JAM.) Nhb.¹ [bāx, bāf.]

1. Unpleasant to the taste.

Sc. Take thee three bites of an black Houre, And Ruebarb baach and bitter, WATSON Coll. (1706) III. 10 (JAM.); In this sense we now use 'waugh', ib. e.Lth. As for his sermon, it seemed to me puir baughstuff, HUNTER J. Inwick (1895) 40.

2. Not good, sorry, indifferent. Cf. baff.

Sc. A bauch tradesman, one who is far from excelling in his profession. A horse is said to be bauch-shod or his shoes are said to be bauch, when they are much worn. Ice is said to be bauch, when there has been a partial thaw (JAM.); It is a bauch brewing that's no good in the newing, RAMSAY Prov. (1737). Per. Curlers speak of dull ice as 'rael bauch' (G.W.). Lnk. A youth, though sprung frae kings, looks bauch and blate, RAMSAY Gentle Shep. (1725) 79, ed. 1783. Cum. They say beauty without bounty's but bauch, CAINE Shad. Crime (1885) 47.

Hence (1) Bauchly, adv. sorrowly, indifferently; (2) Bauchness, sb. want, defect of any kind, indifference.

(1) Sc. Compar'd with hers, their lustre fa', And bauchly tell Her beauties, she excels them a', RAMSAY Poems (1727) II. 397, ed. 1800 (JAM.). (2) Sc. (JAM.) Per. Not common. A curler is asked, 'Was your ice good to-day?' He might say, 'No, there was a bauchness about it.' A joiner might say, 'I cannot put up with bauchness in my tools' (G.W.).

3. Abashed, timid, sheepish.

Abd. Ye're nae to be bauch and chucken-heartit, ALEXANDER Johnny Gibb (1871) xxi. Per. 'He lookit unco baugh,' he looked much out of countenance (JAM.). Rxb. But if he cracks but little now 'Tis no that he's a baugh ane, RIDDELL Poet. Wks. (1871) II. 131.

Hence Bauchness, sb. backwardness or slowness arising from timidity.

n.Sc. (W.G.)

4. Weak, tired out, exhausted.

Sc. That I may ken howe bauch I am, RIDDELL Ps. (1857) xxxix. 4; The auld wise man grew baugh And turn'd to shank away, HOGG Jacob. Rel. (1819) I. 71, ed. 1874 (JAM.). Nhb.¹

2. A person or thing of no account.

Sc. To make a bauchle of anything, is to use it so freq. and familiarly, as to show that one has no respect for it. One who is set up as the butt of a company, or a laughing-stock, is said to be made a bauchle of (JAM.); It's better than war; which is the next best however, though generally rather a bauchle of a business, STEVENSON Catriona (1892) xi. Fif. When I see hoo some men gang on I'm fair scunnered, makin' perfect bauchles o' their wives, ROBERTSON Provost (1894) 174. Sik. The lassie has walth o' gear to maintain baeth the sel o' her, an' ony chop she likes to marry. . . I wod rather that she got a man than a bauchle, HOGG Winter Ev. Tales (1820) I. 282.

3. An awkward, clumsy person.

Sc. GROSE (1790) MS. add. (C.) Ant. Ballymena Obs. (1892); (M.B.-S.); A 'baghal of a child' (S.A.B.).

BAUCHLE, *sb.*² Sc. The upright front of a pen barrow. Per. A peat barrow has no back and no sides; when being rolled along the contents would drop over the 'trindle' were it not for the bauchle (G.W.).

2. pl. Two pieces of wood, fixed one on each side of a cart to extend the surface.

Per. [Bauchles] differ from 'shilmonts,' as not forming an oblong frame; the bauchles having no cross-bars at the top and bottom of the cart (JAM.).

BAUCHLE, v.¹ Sc. Also written bachle, bawchyll (JAM.). [bāx̄l.] To shamble, walk loosely; esp. to wear shoes out of shape.

Sc. As denoting a loose, awkward, and unequal motion . . . it is applied both to man and beast. To bachle shoon, is to wear them in so slovenly a manner as to let them fall down in the heels; to tread them awry (JAM.). Per. (G.W.) Lth. Beggars come hirplin' an' bauchlin' out, BALLANTINE Poems (1856) 23.

[A bair clock and a bachlane naig, Leg. Bp. St. Andrews (16th cent.) (JAM.).]

BAUCHLE, v.² Sc. (JAM.) Nhb. Also written bachle (JAM.); baughle Nhb.¹ To treat contemptuously.

Lth. To bauchle a lass, to jilt a young woman.

Hence Bauchling, vbl. sb. reproaching, taunting.

Sc. The term seems to include any indication of contempt by signs as well as by words. Nhb.¹ The inhabitants of Tynedale and Redesdale were in former days given to baughling, or reproaching, an adversary—daring him to fight (obs.). Bauchling at the meetings of the Scotch and English wardens, as it frequently led to blows, was prohibited under the penalty of a month's imprisonment, OLIVER Rambles (1835) 138.

Bawleys are gen. about 40 ft. in length, 13 ft. beam, 5 ft. draught, and 15 or 20 tons measurement; they differ in rig from a cutter, in having no boom to the mainsail, which is consequently easily brailed up when working the trawl nets. They are half-decked with a wet well to keep fish alive. 'Hawley, Bawley—Hawley, Bawley, What have you got in your trawley?' is a taunting rhyme to use to a bawley-man.

BAY, *sb.*¹ Irel. Yks. Chs. Der. Lei. Nhp. War. Shr. Hrf. Bdf. Hrt. Nrf. Suf. Ess. Ken. Sur. Sus. Hmp. Wil. Som. Also written bee s. Chs.¹ [bē, beə.]

1. A division or space in a building between two main beams; gen. applied to a barn or farm-building.

n. Ir. The bay is the distance or space from one 'couple' to another. A house with one 'couple' would have two bays. These bays seem only to mark the divisions of the roof, not necessarily the ground space (A. J. I.). w. Yks. A row of cottages, having five rooms to the front, is said to be of five bays, or five bay, for the word does not appear to be used in the plural. So a barn, of which the roof is divided by the main cross-beams into five portions, is said to be of five bay, Hlf. Wds.; w. Yks.¹ We say of anything valuable, 'It's worth a bay of wheat.' nw. Der.¹ Lei.¹ The vicarage house, consisting of five bays, and a barn of five bays, a stable, and two other little bays of building, Terrier of Claybrook (1638). Nhp.¹ A barn is said to consist of so many bays according to the number of beams; each is termed a ten, fifteen, or twenty feet bay in accordance with the space between each beam, and the quantity of wheat lying on one side of a barn, or more correctly between the main beams, is designated a bay of wheat; Nhp.² War.³ Quite common. e. An.¹ We speak of a barn, or a cart-lodge, of so many bays. Suf. (C. T.), Suf.¹, Sns.¹ Sus., Hmp. Holloway. Wil.¹ w. Som.¹ If an old roof required new covering in uncertain weather, it would be usual to give orders only to strip one bay at a time. It would gen. be about ten feet wide, but depending upon the construction of the roof. Wee aa'n u-guut un'ee bud waun bai' u raefturz vur tu fūn'eeesh [we have only got one bay of rafters to finish].

2. The space between the threshing-floor and the end of a barn, in which corn or straw is stored.

w. Yks.² That part of a barn in which corn or straw is stored.

Chs.¹ The old-fashioned barn consisted of a threshing floor, or barn proper, in the middle, which was flagged, sometimes boarded, and in a few of the very oldest buildings, made of a calcareous clay, which was burnt and hardened into a kind of cement. On one or both sides of the threshing floor was a bay for storing corn in the sheaf. The bays were separated from the threshing floor by a low wall, but were otherwise open to the barn. There are plenty still in existence; Chs.² A division, like a barn, only open partially on two, three, or all sides, with a slate roof, where hay is placed instead of being stacked in a hay-rick. It is something synonymous with balks, except that in the latter case the hay is completely under cover. s. Chs.¹ A compartment communicating with a barn by means of a large square opening in the wall. Der.² nw. Der.¹ That portion of many barns on one side of the threshing floor, extending from the floor to the roof, as distinguished from the bawks on the other side which is the space over the shippens or cow-houses. Shr. The air penetrates through all parts of a bay surrounded with boards, MARSHALL Review (1818) II. 238; Shr.¹, Hrf.¹ Bdf. A bay of corn, a part railed off from barton, BATCHELOR Anal. Eng. Lang. (1809). Hrt. He had but half a bay of wheat, ELLIS Mod. Husb. (1750) V. i. Nrf., Suf., Ess. MORTON Cyclo. Agric. (1863). Suf. RAINBIRD Agric. (1819) 288, ed. 1849. Ken. In the old-fashioned barns the middle is divided from either side by boarded partitions about four feet high; these sides so boarded off are termed bays (P.M.). Sur.¹, Hmp. (J. R. W.), Hmp.¹ w. Som.¹ That part of a barn which is gen. on each side of the thrashing-floor; in this sense, no doubt, the space partitioned off by the floor partakes of the nature of a recess. The word is used to express the entire space on either side of the floor.

3. Comp. Bay-boards, (1) the boards which partition off the middle of the barn from the bays; (2) the boards which fit into the space between the doors of a barn and the ground; (3) boards in an oast kiln to prevent the hops falling out when the door is opened.

(1) Ken. In some places the boards which cover the space between the bottom of the barn-door and the ground are called rack-boards, while the term bay-boards is confined to the boards which partition off the middle of the barn from the bays (P.M.). (2) Ken. (P.M.); Ken.¹ The large folding doors of a barn do not reach to the ground, and the intervening space is closed by four or five moveable boards which fit in a groove—these are called bay-boards. (3) Ken. At the entrance to an oast kiln on the inner side of the door there is a board about 2 ft. high—detachable, sliding in grooves, to prevent the hops falling out when the door is opened; this is called the bay-boards (P.M.).

4. One of the rooms of a cottage or one-storied house.

N. I.¹, w. Yks.²

[1. A bay of building, mensura viginti quatuor pedum, COLES (1679); Travée, a bay of building; the space and length between the main beams of a room or between two beams, Cotgr. Fr. baie, OFr. baée, 'ouverture béante' (HATZFELD).]

BAY, *sb.*² and *v.*¹ Ken. Sur. Sus. I. W. Wil. Dor. Som. Dev. [bē, beə.]

1. sb. A dam or bank across a stream to keep back the water; also the pool itself.

Ken. (P.M.) Sur.¹ A pond-head, where the water is kept up to drive a mill, or for ornamental purposes. Sus.¹, I. W.² n. Wil. These [jacks] will leap a bay or dam if it interrupts their voyaging down the stream. I have seen a young jack, about a foot long, leap over a bay, and fall three or four feet on to the stony floor below, JEFFERIES Wild Life (1879) 355. Wil.¹ Dor. BARNES Gl. (1863). w. Som.¹ Never applied to the water itself. In mixing mortar, it is usual to make a circular bay of sand to retain the water poured on the lime. A very common method of fish-poaching is to make a bay, at a dry season, so as to divert the stream from a pool or a hole, and then to dip out all the water in the pool, of course catching all the fish. Dev. The stream falls over its rocky ledges into deep 'bays,' where the clear brown water, after eddying round and round as if seeking an outlet, checks its speed for a moment, PAGE Explor. Drtm. (1889) xii.

2. v. To dam or keep back water; gen. used with back.

Ken. (P.M.), Sur.¹, Wil.¹ w. Som.¹ To bay back the water, is one of the commonest of phrases. The wind bayed back the tide. Mr. Baker've a bayed back the water eens all o' it urnth down his ditch, and we 'ant a got a drop vor the stock to drink. Dev. The water was 3 feet in half an hour, and now you would have to bay back the stream to get a bucket-full, Reports Provinc. (1881) 8.

BAY, v.² and sb.⁵ Sc. Also Som. Dev. [bē.]

I. 1. v. Of stag or bloodhounds: to utter a long, deep howl.

w.Som.¹

2. To assail with barking.

w.Som.¹ Hounds are said to bay a deer when they surround him in some spot where they cannot get at him, but keep baying at him. 'Here the pack bayed him on a rock for an hour, and in attempting to turn round he fell, and the hounds closed on him,' Rec. n.Dev. Staghounds, 41. 'We see below us our quarry, . . . standing proudly on a rock surrounded by the flowing tide. . . The hounds bay him from the land,' COLLYNS, 143.

3. sb. The long, deep howl of hounds when hunting.

w.Som.¹ Of staghounds a man would say: Aay yuurd dhu bai- oa-m [I heard their bay]. Dev. Soon would burst on his ear that loud and welcome chorus called the 'bay,' WHYTE-MELVILLE Katerfelto (1875) xxiii.

4. In phr. to break bay, of a stag: to get away after being brought to bay.

Dev. There's a time for a deer to move, . . . a time for 'un to stand at bay, and a time for 'un to break the bay, WHYTE-MELVILLE Katerfelto (1875) xxv.

II. 1. v. To raise the voice loudly, gen. in weeping.

Bnff.¹ The muckle bairnly breet o' a loon began t'bay an' greet fin's mither geed awa. 'Oot' is sometimes added. The word conveys the idea of childishness.

BEACON-WEED, see Bacon-weed.

BEAD, sb. sw.Sc. (JAM.) [Not known to our correspondents.] In phr. to make a bead, used to signify that a ring of people is formed on any hurried or important business.

sw.Sc. This phr. has originated from the vulgar idea of the formation of the adder-stone. The adders assemble in a certain time of summer to cast off their sloughs and renew their age. . . The sloughs are collected and plastered over with frothy saliva and again wrought to and fro till they are condensed and shaped into an adder bead. . . The bead is often left, and it is treasured up by the shepherds as a talisman of good luck, Rem. Nithsdale Sng. 111.

[A precious beagle, homo inutilis, ineptus, improbus, COLES (1679). Prob. the same as beagle (a small dog for hunting), often glossed with the mg. of 'bitch.' A beagle, petite chienne, SHERWOOD (1672); Begle, canicula, LEVINS Manip. (1570).]

BEAINER, sb. Sh.I. A dog. See Benbiter.

Sh.I. Beainer is a 'lucky word,' used by some of the fishermen at the 'haaf' or deep-sea fishing. During the fishing it was customary to avoid the ordinary names of persons, animals, and things, and to use paraphrases. The custom is now obsolete, but many of these 'lucky words' or 'haaf-words' survive, used most often in joke (J.J.). S. & Ork.¹

BEAINER-SUNDAY, sb. Sh.I. The Sunday before Christmas, on which day it was customary to eat an ox-head for supper.

Sh.I. This custom is still observed (K.I.); (J.J.) S. & Ork.¹

BEAK, *sb.*¹ Var. dial. uses. [bīk, biak.]

BEAKS, sb. pl. Nhb. A punishment inflicted upon the loser in a game of marbles, by 'firing' a marble at the knuckles.

Nhb. 'Knuckle doon, an' tyck yor beaks.' The loser of a game is obliged to place his doubled nief upon the ground and to hold it there whilst each of his opponents jerks his playing marble against his knuckles. At the beginning of a game 'Let's play for beaks' is called. The loser suffers a painful ordeal in enduring his 'beaks,' but it is considered mean to shirk or even to wince at the infliction (R.O.H.); Nhb.¹

BEAL, *sb.*¹ Dor. [bīl.] A small kind of weasel.

s.Dor. 'One of them guinea-pigs has been bitten by a beal.' Beal is certainly the recognized word in the valley of the Stour—I think also in 'the Vale.' To make sure of 'beal' being correct I applied to one of the ancients, whose opinion is as follows: 'There is three sorts: weazel, stoat, and beal, but all belong to the same spicey' [species] (C.K.P.).

[Ofr. bele (mod. belle), fem. of bel (beau), beautiful; cp. Ofr. bellette (mod. bellette), a weasel. Belette, 'propert., la jolie petite bête' (HATZFELD). See Fairy (weasel). BEAM, *sb.*² and *v.*¹ Yks. Som. [bīm, biəm.]

1. sb. Weaving term: a circular piece of wood upon which the warp is wound.

w.Yks. (W.T.) w.Som.¹ In every common loom there are two beams or rollers, one called the chain beem, on which is wound the warp, and from which it is unwound as the cloth is woven; the other called the klau'th beem, upon which the fabric is rolled up as woven. [Gl. Lab. (1894).]

2. v. To wind the warp upon the chain beam.

w.Som.¹ This is a matter of some nicety, as all the threads have to be kept even and parallel, or [the warp] will not make a good bosom.

Hence (1) Beamer, sb. one who winds the warp upon the roller ready for the weaver to place in his loom; (2) Beaming, vbl. sb. the process of putting a warp on a beam or roller ready for the loom; (3) Beaming-frame, sb. the machine in which the above operations preparatory to weaving are performed.

(1) Dev. The principal singularities of Dev. husbandry . . . are the following: . . . the practice of 'beat-burning' for wheat and turnips, MOORE Hist. Dev. (1829) I. 295; Reports Agric. (1793-1813); Dev.¹ Beat and Burning-beat is an agricultural operation, which appears to have originated in Dev. and hence is called Denshiring in many parts. It consists in spading, velling, or ploughing off the turf (spine) from old fallow lands, scuffling or tormenting the sods so as to knock out the earth they contain; then laying them in heaps (beat-barrows) to dry, and burning them; finally, the ashes thus obtained are distributed over the soil previously to the operation of the plough, and are said to enrich and meliorate it in a remarkable degree, partly perhaps by the salts which they contain, and partly by disintegrating a tenacious and clayey soil, and rendering it more pervious to moisture. BEAT, *v.*² Irel. Nhb. Dur. Yks. Stf. Nhp. Shr. Brks. e.An. Sus. I.W. Wil. Som. Dev. [bēt, beāt.]

1. In phr. (1) beat the boundary, see below; (2) — clots, to break up the hard dry lumps of cow-dung, lying in a pasture; (3) — the devil round the gooseberry bush, to tell a long story without much point; (4) — the devil and Dr. Foster, to excel, surpass; (5) — my neighbour out of doors, the card-game of 'beggar-my-neighbour'; (6) — the streets, to run about idly; (7) — into any one, to make comprehend; (8) — out, (a) to thrash; (b) to puzzle, put in a quandary; (9) — out the time, to while away the time; (10) — up, to get on.

(1) Stf.² 'To beat the boundary' is used of an old custom of defining the boundaries of a Borough or Township. Each year the Mayor, Corporation, and other public officials would march in the solemn procession along the border-line of their district. The observance contributed some merriment when an arduous official would insist on literally fulfilling his duty, clambering over the houses that opposed his progress and crossing the stream by means of a plank. Shr. The old-fashioned Rogation-day procession of parish dignitaries bearing long wands with which the boundary marks were beaten, the company of little boys, who were made to clamber over house-roofs and put into odd holes and corners, and not unfrequently whipped at important points to make them remember, are well known in all parts of Eng., BURNE Flk-Lore (1883-86) 344. [It was a gen. custom formerly, and is still observed in some country parishes, to go round the bounds and limits of the parish on one of the three days before Holy Thursday, when the minister, accompanied by his Churchwardens and parishioners, were wont to deprecate the vengeance of God, beg a blessing on the fruits of the earth, and preserve the rights and properties of the parish, BRAND Pop. Antiq. (1849) I. 197.] (2) Wil.¹ (3) Sus.¹ An old man at Rye said he did not think the new curate was much of a hand in the pulpit, he did beat the devil round the gooseberry-bush so. (4) Ir. (3) Shr.¹ Obsol., implement used to pare off the turf in the process of 'betting and burning.' [It resembled the 'flaying spade,' q.v.]

2. In phr. beat and burn, see below.

Shr.¹ Obsol. An agricultural process adapted to the improvement of rough grass land. It consists of paring off the surface soil with an implement called a 'betting-iron,' collecting into heaps, burning it, and when in a charred state digging it a spade's depth into the ground. 'It's a rough plack, but I'm gwein to bet an' burn it; the turf ess is capital for tatoes.'

Hence beating and burning, phr.

Shr.¹ Beating and burning is still practised in the neighbourhood of Minsterley. nw.Dev.¹ Risdon (about 1630) speaks of 'beating and burning,' and thus describes the process: 'Paring the grain of their ground with mattocks into turfs, then drying and loughing those turfs into burrows, and so burning them, and spreading their ashes on the ground so pared . . . ; which kind of beating and burning is rare in other shires, and seems to be originally peculiar to this county, being known by the name of Denshering in other counties.'

BEATER, sb. Nhb. Dur. Yks. Lin.

1. A tool used for beating down soil, &c. into a hole; esp. for stemming a hole when blasting in rocks or mines.

Nhb.¹ Nhb., Dur. A blunt-ended tool used for beating, stemming, or tamping a hole after the blasting charge has been put in; it has a groove upon one side for the pricker, which remains in the hole during the process of stemming, NICHOLSON Coal Tr. Gl. (1888) n.Yks. (I.W.) e.Yks. The earth would cleame to the beater, BEAT Rur. Econ. (1641) 107. w.Yks.¹

2. A name given to various tools for beating or crushing.

Nhb.¹ A stone used for braying sand. Yks. A platelayer's pick, with which he beats the ballast under the sleepers to obtain a solid foundation for them (B.K.). n.Lin.¹ (1) A flat piece of wood with a shaft inserted diagonally in its upper surface, used for crushing the seed vessels of flax. (2) A stick with a knob at the end, used for mashing potatoes. (3) The projecting pieces of wood inside a churn. w.Som.¹ Bee'-utur, or bai'tur, the drum in a thrashing-machine which actually beats out the corn from the ear.

BEATH, v. Shr. Hrf. Nrf. Suf. Ess. Also written beeth Shr.¹ [bīð.]

BEAUMONTAGUE, sb. Sc. Nhb. Lan. Ken. Also written bomontagu Nhb.¹ A kind of putty; see below.

Frf. At the Tay Bridge inquiry here, frequent mention has been made of the filling up of blow-holes, &c., in the columns of the bridge, with a mixture which the moulders styled 'beaumontague,' N. & Q. (1880) 6th S. i. 256. Nhb. In common use on the Tyne (R.O.H.); Nhb.¹ A mixture of tar and china clay, beaten up hard and used in stemming acid condensers and stone acid tanks and cisterns in chemical works. Lan. The word Beaumontague is used very extensively, and is given to any plastic substance for covering a defect in any material. 'He is rammin' it wi' bomantigue' means that he is filling up or covering some defect; not necessarily 'scamping' (H.M.). Ken. At the S.E. Railway works, at Ashford, some fifteen years ago, putty used to be called 'hoormanteeg,' and the word was, I think, gen. used mockingly when a carpenter employed the putty to hide defects in his work, N. & Q. (1880) 6th S. i. 304; (D.W.L.); Rarely, if ever, used now, but was very common. It was used in connexion with 'scamped work,' and was also applied to the man himself in contempt for his work (H.M.). [When I was a boy it was spelt as pronounced, 'bomentaig,' and was much used by painters, carpenters, and other artificers whose work involved the filling up cracks, N. & Q. (1880) 6th S. i. 304.]

BEAU REYNOLDS, sb. Sur.¹ A name for the fox. See Mus Reynolds.

BEAUTIFY, v. Brks. To make one's toilet very carefully.

Brks. Common enough, but I have not heard it lately among natives (M.J.B.); Brks.¹

BEAU-TRAP, sb. Nhp. Nrf. Slang. A loose stone in the pavement, which tips up when stepped upon, and scatters the dirty water collected under it over the pedestrian.

Nhp.¹, Nrf.¹ Slang. A town (Plymouth) where beau-traps under water grin, Inviting gentle strangers to walk in, PETER PINDAR Wks. (1816) I. 398.

[The word means lit. a trap for catching a beau (a fop or dandy).]

BEAUTY, sb. Yks. Chs. War. Wor. Dev. Cor. and in gen. colloq. use. Written booty. Chs.^{1,2,3} [biu'ti, bū'ti.]

1. Used ironically, as a term of contempt, of a person whose conduct is the reverse of beautiful.

War.³ He's a beauty—I wonder you're not ashamed to be seen with him. 'Er was a beauty, 'er was,' spoken of a past servant, would mean that she was impertinent and unmanageable, or incompetent in a marked degree. w.Cor. She's a beauty without paint or polish. I wonder she can keep such a beauty in her house, she's a reg'lar bad 'un (M.A.C.). Cor.² That beauty! You'm a putty beauty!

2. Comp. (1) Beauty-house, a child's name for any box or shelf ornamented in imitation of a cabinet; (2) -spot, a kind of pimple about the mouth; (3) -water, early morning dew.

(1) Cha.^{1,2}; Cha.³ An expression used by children for any old box, shelf, or out-of-doors rockery, or rather crockery, ornamented by them with bits of glass, china, coloured stones, &c. (2) w.Yks.⁵, Wor. (J.W.P.) (3) Dev.⁹ It is said if a girl washes her face with dew in the early morning that she has 'rubbed en up wi' bütty-wätter.'

w.Yks.² A square is chalked out . . . called the den; some of the boys remain by it, one of whom is called the 'tenter'; the tenter has charge of the den, and he must always stand with one foot in the den and the other on the road; the remaining boys go out to field. . . . They shout 'Relievo,' and upon this signal the boys standing by the side of the den pursue them. . . . Sometimes the cry is 'Delievo' not 'Relievo'. . . . Sometimes the tenter instead of standing with one foot in the den stands as far from the prisoner as the prisoner can spit. . . . If when a prisoner is caught, he cries out 'Kings,' or 'Kings to rest,' he is allowed to escape. The game is a very rough one. War.² One party have a start, and, when the leader cries 'Bedlam,' the other party follow, and attempt to make prisoners. . . . Should one of the captive's friends dash through the den unchecked, crying, 'Release Bedlam,' the captive may make off again. Should the would-be releaser be caught in the attempt, he and his comrade must remain in the den. The game goes on until all are caught, and then the other party take their 'outing.'

BEDSTOCKS, sb. Nhb. w.Yks. A boys' game; also called 'Bed-o,' 'Prisoners' base.' See Bedlam, *sb.*²

Nhb.¹ In this game sides are formed, and the lads on one side give chase to those on the other. When a capture is made the pursuer spits over the head of his prey, the captive is put into a marked-off place, and the capturer places his foot on a spot about two yards off. Here the captive shouts lustily to his side, 'Relieve a marrow!' As each is brought in, his capturer takes the place of the lad on guard, and one can hold several captives. But if one of the side that is being chased can manage to run through between the guard and his captives, the whole of his side are 'relieved,' and they run off. This is the game known elsewhere as 'Prisoners' Base.' w.Yks.⁵ One side or company hides separately within certain pre-arranged limits, when, at a certain signal, the other side commences cautiously the tracking of them. When one of the hiding number is discovered, 'I spy [such an one]!' (naming him) is shouted out, when the whole of the tracking party run back to their station and spit on the wall. If this is not done the discovered one can take him to the place from whence he started, and claim to be ridden upon his back down to the station or place of rendezvous, and the number of rides are 'counts,' so many making up the game. The 'spied' ones, and others who have not been espied, but who think it a good opportunity, rush out of their place of concealment immediately, and if they are fortunate enough to lay hold of one before the goal is reached and can retain their hold till their 'nomony' is said (which consists in repeating the figures, 'two, four, six, eight, ten,' and spitting over the head of the captured) the ride is claimed in due course. If no rides are obtained ultimately, the winning side goes in again and have their 'seccy outing.' It is a game only resorted to during the winter evenings when the darkness favours their movements.

(8) *Nhb.*¹ It is never considered lucky to be the sole owner of bees. A man and a woman, not man and wife, should be partners. If either should die, some one should go at midnight, tap each hive three times, and desire the bees to work for their new master or mistress, as the case may be, Trans. Tyneside Natur. Fld. Club (1860-62) V. 91. Der. N. & Q. (1851) 1st S. iv. 309. n.Lin. If the bees were not told [of a death] they would leave their hives, and never return. Some people give them a piece of the funeral cake; I don't think that it is absolutely necessary, but certainly it is better to tell them of the death, ib. 270. *Lei.*¹ A death in the family should always be officially notified to the bees, perhaps in a whisper, who will resent the slight cast upon them as members of the household by the non-performance of the ceremony by forsaking the hive or dying. *War.*² The custom is still observed, but it must be in a whisper, to avoid giving offence to the bees. Shr. The bees are told the news, and often put into mourning; the rooks are warned, BURNE Flk-Lore (1883) 299; The proper time for the communication is either just before the funeral leaves the house, or else at the moment when it is starting. [On the Welsh border they say] it must be done in the middle of the night. [The phrases used are] 'A.B. is dead, and they're carrying him out' (Church Stretton); 'The master is dead' (Clun); 'Your friend's gone' (Wenlock); 'The poor maister's dead, but yo mun work fur me' (Meole Brace). In n.Shr. it is very common [at a funeral] . . . to 'heave up' the hives, i. e. lift them a few inches from the stand and set them down again, ib. 235-6. Oxf. Three taps are made on the hives with the house-key, while the informant repeats; 'Bees, bees, your master is dead, and you must work for —', naming the future owner. A piece of black crape is then fastened to the hive. . . . On weddings the bees always expect to be informed of the auspicious event, and to have their hive decorated with a wedding favour, N. & Q. (1851) 1st S. iv. 309. Bck. It is common, on the death of any one of the family, for the nurse to go to all the bee-hives in the garden, and tap gently three times, each time repeating three times these words, 'Little brownie, little brownie, your master's dead'; when the bees, beginning to hum, show their consent to remain, ib. Sur., Sus., I.W., Wil. ib. Dor. It was the universal custom to wake the bees by tapping at their lives whenever a death occurred in the household, under the belief that if this were not done the bees themselves would pine away and perish during the ensuing year. As soon as an interior buzzing responded to her tap at the first hive, Mrs. Hall went on to the second, and thus passed down the row, HARDY Wess. Tales (1888) II. 46. w.Som. A man, whose wife had very recently died, came and asked me to buy two hives of bees from him. Well knowing the old superstition, I suggested that the man wished to sell the bees at once, lest they should die. Au! noa'ü zr! aay-v u-toa'ld um oa'ut. Aay wai'n daewn pun mée nec'z, ceems dhai kaard ur aewt, un aay wüs-purd ut tüc um: zoa yüe noa kizh'un tu bee u-fee'ürd baewd um zr [oh! no, sir, I've told them of it. I went down on my knees, whilst they were carrying her out, and I whispered it to them; so you've no occasion to be afraid about them, sir], ELWORTHY Gram. (1877) 100; w.Som.¹ The belief is almost universal, that should a death occur in the house to which the bees belong, each butt ought 'to be told of it,' otherwise they will all die. It is considered very unlucky if in swarming the bees alight on a dead tree; it portends that there will be a death in the family soon. Var. dial. In Suf, inquiring of a cottager who had lately lost a relative . . . she replied 'Oh, yes; when my aunt died I told every skep myself, and put them into mourning.' The same superstition exists in Dev. Glo. Yks. and Cor., BRAND Pop. Antiq. (ed. 1849) 301.

Chs. (K.); Chs.¹ Beast milk is highly valued for making puddings, &c., and is frequently sent by farmers' wives as a present to friends who do not keep cows. In country towns those who sell milk often send beast milk to their customers as a present.—Beast-milk pudding, or beast pudding, is a custard pudding, made by baking beast milk, which solidifies without the addition of eggs. The dish is generally first lined with pastry. Occasionally they are made in the form of raised pies. The milk is sweetened and flavoured with nutmeg or pudding spice. A very favourite dish.—Beast-milk porridge, or, more generally, beast porridge, is beast milk heated over the fire in a saucepan until it thickens. It must not be allowed actually to boil, and must be stirred the whole time to prevent it solidifying. It is sweetened and flavoured with nutmeg, and is very palatable. It is always spoken of in the plural, as, 'They're very good,' s.Chs.¹ Der. GROSE (1790), nw.Der.¹, Glo. Gl. (1851). Ken.¹ Beasts, the first two or three meals of milk after a cow has calved. Known also as Biskins, Bismilk, Poad-milk. w.Som.¹ The bae-us, bee-us, bae-us milk, or bee-us milk is never used for dairy purposes, but generally given to pigs. The word is used as often without 'milk' as with it. 'I've a stroked her down, for to take off the base.'

Hence Beesty, adj. having the qualities of beest.

Chs.¹ Milk is said to be beasty as long as it retains any of the peculiar characteristics of beast milk, which coagulates with heat. Beasty milk gives an intensely yellow colour to butter, and a peculiar sweetish flavour to cheese; accordingly it is not used for either purpose at first. The custom is not to put beasty milk into the cream-steen till after the third meal, nor into the cheese-tub till after the fifth meal; and that is often a little too soon, cheese being spoiled by using it. s.Chs.¹

1. To mend, repair. Used only of mending nets, or joining thread.

w.Yks. In the woollen trade, to bete is to piece or join the ends of a thread together. In beting the soft, slightly twisted threads in the spinning, the fibres are opened and then pressed together by rolling, and so if the joining is neatly done it is almost imperceptible. Fully twisted threads are 'beted' by knotting (W.T.). e.An.¹ We seem to apply it only to mending the broken meshes of a net. Nrf.¹ Cor.¹ Used by Mousehole fishermen; Cor.²

Hence (1) Beeter, sb., see below; (2) Beeting, vbl. sb. mending; a piece for mending warp; (3) Beetster, Better, sb. a woman employed in mending nets.

(1) w.Yks.³ A piece put in to mend a warp when an end or thread has broken. If it breaks in front of the 'yeld' it only wants once tying, otherwise twice. (2) *Sc.
